Twelfth Anniversary.

The Twelfth Anniversary was held in the Broadway Tabernacle, on the 11th of May; the President, Chancellor Walworth, in the chair. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Dr. Hutton, of New York. The President read an address in which he particularly directed the friends of Temperance to the right education of children, and to securing on behalf of the cause, religious influence. The annual Report was read by the Rev. John Marsh, Cor. Sec., and able addresses were made by John P. Hale, Esq. United States Senator, from New Hampshire; Dr. J. Vionis, in French, from France, interpreted by Rev. E. N. Kirk, of Boston; Rev. Dr. Tyng; J. H. W. Hawkins, and Rev. Mr. King, of Dublin. A collection was taken up of $137.70, for the spread of the cause.

The Report expressed gratitude for what had been accomplished, but undiminished indignation and distress at continued evils. The desolating traffic is still in the land, licensed by law and upheld by public sentiment. Twenty-three million gallons of pure alcohol in various mixtures, here annually pass from the vender to the consumer to make drunkards, distress families, fill up poor-houses, and degrade the nation. In Great Britain are consumed 28 million gallons of this deceitful, destructive poison; in Prussia, 15,900,000 gallons; in Sweden, 11 million; in France, 137 millions. In these five countries are annually expended, according to official returns, 546 million dollars for intoxicating drinks. In Great Britain and the United States 100,000 men perish annually from drunkenness. But this is a day of political and moral revolution, and a day of hope. In the past year, the friends of the cause have been discomfited by an action of legislation, antagonistical to the will of the people, expressed at the ballot box. Grants have been retracted. In New York State, after a majority of 68,000 votes given against the licensed traffic, the State is again burdened with it. Vermont, after giving a majority of 8,000 against the licensed traffic, hangs in an evil balance. New Hampshire has instructed her legislature by a vote of 2 to 1, to make a prohibitory statute. Massachusetts is hesitating what to do. Maine is firm against the traffic. The Western States are boldly contesting the right of the rum-seller to flood them with pauperism and crime. The Report alluded to several causes of discouragement, the indifference and hostility of men of wealth and fashion; foreign, emigration; war with Mexico; exportation of rum to pagan nations; return to their cups of reformed inebriates; rum tragedies in every city, town and village. But the people demand protection, and protection they will have. The legislation of the land is behind the voice of the people. Numerous governors of States, judges, and legislators are with us. The ministry and churches are engaging for us with new life. Home and foreign missionaries are throwing all their influence into our scale. State societies and conventions, and numerous orders and associations are affording assistance. About $2,000 have been received at the office in donations, and about the usual number of publications have been issued.

In England, more substantial progress has been made in the last than in any former year, especially among the ministers and churches. Twelve monthly journals and one weekly are devoted to the cause. Ireland holds on her way; and the influence of the Rev. Father Mathew remains undiminished. France needs the Temperance reformation; her annual consumption of wines by 34 millions of people has been 746,571,429 gallons; of brandy, 9,245,425; of spirits, 2,250,000; of cider, 221,705,420; of beer, 74,025,550; in the whole, 1,053,749,854 gallons, and without a reform she can be neither a free nor permanent republic. In Holland, Germany, Prussia, Sweden, Norway, are flourishing societies. The mission stations in Africa complain bitterly of the influence of N. E. Rum. Great and marked progress continues at the Sandwich Islands, and also in New South Wales, Bombay, Madras, Bermuda, Canada, and the West Indies. Respectable Temperance journals are published on the other side of the globe. The Committee feel that there is great encouragement in the signs of the times, and resolve to press forward, looking up to God for his blessing.

John Tappan, Esq., moved the acceptance of the Report, and that it be printed under direction of the Executive Committee. The motion was seconded by Rev. Dr. Edwards, Secretary of the American Sabbath Union, who strongly urged the circulation of the Temperance documents around the world.

The False God.

Among the many peculiar customs of the Chinese, there is one peculiarly peculiar. Among the many false gods which they worship, if, perchance, there be one to whom for years they have offered the most costly sacrifices, and poured out the richest oblations, to whom they have knelt and prayed, and for all these have received nothing in return, they charge it with being a false god. "For all our offerings we have received nothing; this is no true God. There is no profit in his worship," they say. The accusation is entered, and they have a trial. The mandarin sits in judgment. Proclamation is made that any shall show cause, if he can, why the god should be dethroned. The evidence is received, and then, if the god be condemned, sentence is passed, its altars are cast down, and its worship made infamous. My friends, is there not a false god in this country too? Have we not been worshipping a false god, presenting costly incense, and offering up our most precious possessions? And have we not been doing this for years? What profit has there been in his worship? Why should we not have a trial of this false god, and have it to-day? I should like to attend such a trial, before the whole American people. His priests should be called upon for his defence, and his worshippers should testify, and show cause, if they can, why he is not a false god. I would call up Old Age, with his tottering footsteps. And I would ask, Show me what profit there is in this worship? With trembling voice he would answer, "My first-born and my last-born has he taken from me; and in youth they went down to the grave; of sons and daughters has he robbed me; yes, and health, and wealth, and peace of mind; the wife of my youth, and the stay of my declining years, all, all have been sacrificed, and naught is left but an infamous name and a drunkard's grave." What profit is this? And I would call up woman to give her testimony, with her crushed affections, and blighted hopes, and weeping eyes. And what return has she received but poverty and disgrace, and an early grave? So we would go through every department of society, and every walk of life; not only through the hut of poverty, but the parlor of wealth, the hall of science, and the temple of religion. Yea, I would summon the Church, and she would say that her most promising and gifted sons, her brightest and best ornaments, at the very time when they were sounding the alarm on the watch-towers of Zion, when preaching of "temperance, righteousness, and a judgment to come," have fallen. The destroyer crept into the sanctuary, and laid his hand upon the preacher and laid him low. And so he has entered the hall of justice, and the Senate, and every place where there were victims to be sacrificed.—Why, then, when the testimony is so conclusive, when the judgment and the reason are convinced, why is not the verdict rendered and the sentence pronounced, and the execution made.—Speech of the Hon. John P. Hale.

Dialogue between a Parent and a Tetotaler.

Tetotaler.—I see you give your children intoxicating drink ; why do you do it ?

Parent.—Why do you ask me such a question ?

T.—Because I think God may be angry with you. God says, “Wo to him that giveth his neighbor drink and makest him drunken.” Your child is your neighbor, your nearest neighbor, and you have no right to put the bottle to his lips and make him drunken.

P.—I do not make him drunken.

T.—How do you know that ? How can you tell till your work is done ? If he becomes a drunkard, there is a process, and in that process there is a father’s hand. You put fire to a barn, it burns a little and goes out. Are you the less guilty than if it burned to the ground ?

P.—That depends on my intention. If I intend to guard and check and extinguish it, there is no guilt.

T.—But if it escapes you and rages, and burns house after house, who will care for your intention ? 300,000 parents gave their children intoxicating drink, and they became drunken, and are the drunkards now cursing the land. 300,000 more gave their children the same drink, and they escaped ; but was there any moral difference in the two ? Neither intended harm. One child got into the rapids and went to destruction ; another was turned into an eddy and saved. God says, “Train up a child in the way he should go.” Give him wine and strong drink, and you train him up in the way he should not go—the way of the moderate drinker, the way of the drunkard.

P.—But my neighbors give their children drink, and—I shall be unfashionable if I withhold it from mine !

T.—So some of your neighbors teach their children to lie, and swear, and break the sabbath ; but how are they a rule for you ?

P.—But I give them but little !

T.—And that little makes them want more, and more ; and as well, by and by, may you tell the whirlwind to stop. No matter what you mean, or what you intend. You sow the wind, and you may reap the whirlwind ; and when the storms burst upon you, you will cry guilty, guilty.

Affecting Scene.

A gentleman writing to the Star of Temperance relates the following affecting tale. Early, upon one of the bright mornings with which heaven hath blessed us this winter, a little girl, of eleven years of age, was seen hurrying from a grog-shop, to her home with a bottle of whisky. In a short time she was again seen travelling the same course, and again, and again, and again, did she carry to her home the destroying cup, till another morning dawned and death had taken from this beautiful and interesting girl her mother. An inquest was held over the body, and the little girl with her eyes full of tears, and her soul pouring out its grief, gush after gush, stated before the coroner's jury, that she had carried ten pints of whisky the former day and that night, to her parents, who drank nearly the whole, and from the effects of which, the jury decided her mother died. When the dead body of the little girl's mother was laid out for burial by the public officer, her father was suffering with delirium tremens. And, the sad remnant of her whom he once promised to love and cherish in sickness and in health, the mother of his child, he cursed and swore whilst his brain was crazed by the influence of the destroyer, so as to make the hardest heart present shrink back with astonishment and horror; and in this state, I am informed, he too on the next day paid the last demand of nature, leaving his child in the worst part of our city without a friend; and, unless the protection of some one, moved by a just sense of duty shall be yielded to her, to become an early prey to the licentious and the cruelly wicked. Our people are not easily moved by such transactions, for they are too common. The public mind has become so accustomed to such scenes that it is not disturbed by their occurrence. It submits to the worst wrongs and grossest outrages upon humanity with as much apparent unconcern as the poor slave, whose back has been scarred and lacerated times without number, does to his condition. God speed the day, when like the trump of an awakening angel, the condition of our people shall arouse them to action.

"I shall never be a Drunkard."---A true story.

BY PROFESSOR ALDEN.

As John and Henry were going home from school, they saw, at a distance, a number of boys following a man, who was moving slowly along the road. Once in a while, he would turn about, and take a few steps towards them, when they would turn and run away from him.

"What is going on yonder?" said Henry.

"It is a parcel of boys, making fun of a drunken man, I guess," said John.

"Let's cut across the fields, and not meet them," said Henry.

"I will not turn out of my way, for a drunken man," said John.

John had better taken Henry's advice, for when the drunken man came near them, he proved to be John's own father. There he was staggering along, his limbs trembled as if he had the palsy, and he was talking to himself and swearing, while the wicked boys were throwing sticks and mud at him, and provoking him to swear more and more. He did not know his son, as he passed him, and the boys did not know that he was John's father. Bad as they were, they had feeling enough to stop abusing the drunkard, when Henry told them he was John's father.

"Let us go on home," said John to Henry, "I can't do anything for him." Henry felt sorry for his companion, but as he could not think of anything to say, in the way of comforting him, he was silent. — The reason why the boys did not know that the drunken man was John's father, was this: he lived in a remote part of the township; John did not live at home. His mother was dead, and he had no sisters. I do not know how it came to pass, but the fact was, that he had a good home in a religious family.

"I shall never be a drunkard," said John, after he and Henry had walked homewards, for some time in silence.

"I hope not," said Henry. Certainly we should not expect that John would be a drunkard. He had had bitter experience of the horrid effects of drunkenness. He had seen his mother carried to the grave by it; for she died of a broken heart, occasioned by the cruel conduct of her husband. He had often felt the same mortification which he must have felt when he saw those boys abusing his father. He knew the blessed effects of temperance; he had experience of it in his new home, where he was treated as a son. Surely he was the last one that we should expect would be a drunkard. He was just the one to say, "I shall never be a drunkard."

Where is John now? His body is mouldering in a drunkard's grave. He did become a drunkard.

Henry is still living. When the temperance pledge came about, Henry signed it at once. John declined doing so; he had seen enough, he said, to keep him from being a drunkard, without signing a pledge. He should never take any more than was for his good. Like thousands, and tens of thousands, he began a moderate drinker, and died a drunkard's death. It is not enough for a man to say, "I shall never be a drunkard." He must say, "I will never begin to drink."

What is the Harm in Sweet Cider ?

We readily admit that sweet cider, just pressed from the apple, is harmless. It will not intoxicate, but where is the dividing line? At how many days old may we safely drink it? This is hard to define, for sometimes from the peculiar state of the atmosphere, it will intoxicate very early, and again it may remain for nearly a week free from any intoxicating quality. The cider passes so insensibly from one state to the other, we are liable to be deceived at any moment when we tamper with it. If an individual has a quantity of cider on hand, as our farmers generally do, when they make it and drink of it as soon as pressed, he will continue to drink it until it has become impregnated with the intoxicating element, and first thing he knows, he is drunk on cider. It is evident then, that the use of sweet cider is one of the many by-ways to intemperance. Avoid these ways, then, and you will never become a drunkard. It is quite remarkable that sweet cider is such an obstacle in the way of some. Every man has to do without sweet cider ten months in the year, but few are willing to do without it the other two. If any man loves the cause of temperance, and desires to promote its prosperity, he certainly ought to be willing to sacrifice the luxury of drinking sweet cider two months in the year, when no vital principle is involved. He must be a poor temperance man that cannot make such a sacrifice.

The following stirring call, founded upon an interesting private incident, may happily rouse some desponding spirit to noble action:

"Courage Boy, Courage."

BY REV. T. T. WATERMAN.

Yes, courage boy, courage! and press on thy way,
There is nothing to harm thee, nothing to fear,
Do all that Truth bids thee, and do it to-day;
Hold on thy purpose, do right, persevere!

Though waves of temptation in anger may roll,
And storm cloud on storm cloud, hang dark in the sky,
Still courage boy, courage! there's strength in thy soul;
Believing and doing, bring help from on high.

When breakers are round thee, 'mid wreck and 'mid roar,
Eye closer thy compass, be fervent in prayer;
The Saviour Almighty can help thee ashore,
And songs of salvation be sung by thee there!

Let joy light thy cheek then, and hope gild thy brow,
Ne'er parley with wrong, nor ill stay to borrow;
Let thy object be Truth, thy watchword be now!
Make sure of to-day—trust God for to-morrow.

By deeds of the mighty, who struggled and bled,
Be incited to action, and manfully fight.
Good is worth doing, boy!—and living or dead,
That good shall reward thee with honor and might.

Then, courage boy, courage! there's light in the sky,
Be humble, be active, be honest, be true—
And though Hosts may confront, and Hell lift its cry,
"I've conquer'd!" at last—shall be shouted by you.

Adulteration of Liquors.

A man named A. Gilbert, who has been engaged in the ^{trading} alcoholic drinks, but who left the business on account of his compelled to use so many poisonous ingredients in the adulteration of his liquors, has published a letter in the Delaware Temperance Herald, in reference to such adulteration. The statements made by him merely confirms various chemical experiments, which have been made to analyze alcoholic drinks, as used in this country. He says :

“ Among the ingredients used is vitriol—a well known poison. It is used when liquor is reduced below proof from 15 to 25. In this case it will lose its ‘bead.’ By adding vitriol, the bead will rise when shaken. Some use pearlashes, &c. Vitriol is mostly used in rum, gin, brandy, and other spirits, where much reliance is with the eye. Copperas is used in turning rye whisky into West India rum.

“ Sweet nitre and corrosive sublimate are used in wine and beer. Sweet nitre is used here, as it gives a sweet smell as well as taste. Tart beer and wine are bought at low prices. These two articles are taken most generally to our cities, where large vats are prepared for the same. In these vats are put various drugs, such as sugar of lead, litharge, potash, alum, brazil wood, gypsum, and various other ingredients. If you desire to make port wine, add a quantity of good port to these drugs, and let it stand for a time. Then turn it off, and put up the same for use.”

Alcohol in Wine.

Many persons suppose there is little or no alcohol in wine. This question may be easily settled. Take a tumbler half full of any kind of merchantable wine; add to it as much pearl-ash as will dissolve; the pearl-ash having a stronger chemical affinity for the water, than the water has for alcohol, will abstract the water, and leave the alcohol free. Its presence can then be demonstrated by applying a lighted taper. The strong or generous wines, as Port, Sherry, Madeira, &c., contain from 12 to 18 per cent. of alcohol, and the light wines, as Claret, Hock, Moselle, &c., from 7 to 12 per cent. According to Dr. L. C. Beck, Albany ale contains 14 per cent. proof spirit.

Dr. Tyng and the Bees

At a Temperance meeting held at the Tabernacle in New York, the Rev. Dr. Tyng called loudly upon ministers to do their duty—and, as he continued, said—“ He preached a Temperance sermon a few weeks ago, without even hoping for success, but three families in his congregation had excluded liquors in consequence. Let ministers do their duty; they must not expect to poke their sticks into such a hornet’s nest as a rumseller’s establishment without being stung. When young, he went to fight the bees to get their honey—the more beat the hives, the more the bees came out and stung them, but fought away with sticks, brushes, and stones, until they whipt off the bees, and got their honey! And so we must serve these rumsellers—the more they sting, the harder we must battle, and truth will prevail in the end! What if they do occupy high places, the traffic is a traffic of blood—and I will testify against it as long as I have a tongue to wag.”

Butchers and Liquor Sellers.

In England a butcher is excluded from the post of petit juror in all cases where human life is at stake, on the ground that his familiarity with the shedding of blood, destroying life, and witnessing the pain consequent upon it, render his heart so callous, so blunt the moral sensibilities, and cause him to set so low an estimate on human life, as to render it unsafe to trust him to decide in cases where death may be the penalty.

Query. Why should not a rumseller be excluded on the same principle? Who destroys more life? Who witnesses more hardening and brutalizing scenes? And who is so often under the power of the maddening cup?

The Five Rumsellers.

WHO OCCUPIED ONE OF THE TAVERNS IN WATERTOWN, CONN.

No. 1—Built a splendid house—failed in business—wife became a drunkard—family homeless. His last business was grave digging.

No. 2—Once accounted rich—failed—could not pay his debts—became so poor as to be unable to entertain family friends. Died in a state of despair.

No. 3—Member of the Church. In three years from his purchase, he filled a drunkard's grave.

No. 4—Son of No. 3. Failed in business. Afterwards kept a drinking house in another town.

No. 5—The present occupant. Yielded to public sentiment, and now keeps a temperance house. Is a Son of Temperance.

One of the clergymen in Watertown thinks their taverns have been as prudently managed as any others; and yet in four years the following five incidents occurred in that town.

1st. A single man, a moderate drinker, drank freely on training day and carried a bottle of liquor to bed. He undertook to go down stairs for water during the night, fell, and broke his neck.

2d. A man of family, a kind husband and father, considered a moderate drinker, was suddenly seized with delirium tremens, and died after four days of intense suffering.

3d. A father of a family of three children,—a free drinker—carried a bottle of liquor to a coal-pit where he was to spend the night.—Next morning his little boy was sent to look after him, but soon returned and said, “father will not speak to me.” His wife went down and found his feet and legs frozen—his face and breast burnt to a crisp. Verdict, “death by intoxication and suffocation.”

4th. A free drinker, died a drunkard in the prime of life from liquor procured at the tavern and store, leaving a wife and eight children homeless.

5th. A clerk in the same store sold liquor to his own father, who carried it to an adjoining town, and the following night imbrued his hands in the blood of his twelve children. He is now in the State Prison for life, and his children scattered to the four winds.

Ode to Rum.

BY WILLIAM C. BROWN.

“O thou invisible spirit of rum! if thou hadst no name by which to know thee, we would call thee—devil.”—SHAKESPEARE.

Let thy devotee extol thee,
And thy wondrous virtues sum;
But the worst of names I'll call thee,
O, thou hydra-monster, Rum.

Pimple-maker, visage-bloater,
Health-corrupter, idler's mate;
Mischief-breeder, vice-promoter,
Credit-spoiler, devil's bait.

Almshouse-builder, pauper-maker,
Trust-betrayer, sorrow's source;
Pocket-emptier, Sabbath-breaker,
Conscience-stifler, guilt's resource.

Nerve-enfeeblor, system-shatterer,
Thirst-increaser, vagrant thief;
Cough-producer, treacherous flatterer,
Mud-bedauber, mock relief.

Business-hinderer, spleen-instiller,
Wo-begetter, friendship's bane;
Anger-heater, Bridewell-filler,
Debt-involver, toper's chain.

Memory-drowner, honor-wrecker,
Judgment-warper, blue-faced quack;
Feud-beginner, rags-bedecker,
Strife-enkindler, fortune's wreck.

Summer's cooler, winter's warmer,
Blood-polluter, specious snare;
Mob-collector, man-transformer,
Bond-undoer, gambler's fare.

Speech-bewrangler, headlong bringer,
Vitals-burner, deadly fire;
Riot-mover, firebrand-flinger,
Discord kindler, misery's sire.

Sinews-robber, worth-depriver,
Strength-subduer, hideous foe;
Reason-thwartor, fraud contriver,
Money-waster, nation's woe,

Vile seducer, joy-dispeller,
Peace-disturber, blackguard guest;
Sloth-implanter, liver-swellor,
Brain-distracter, hateful pest.

Utterance-boggler, stench-emitter,
Strong man-sprawlor, fatal drop;
Tumult-raiser, venom-spitter,
Wrath-inspirer, coward's prop.

Pain-inflictor, eyes-inflamer,
Heart-corrupter, folly's nurse;
Secret babblor, body-maimor,
Thrift-defeater, loathsome curse.

Wit-destroyer, joy impairer,
Scandal-dealer, foul-mouthed scourge;
Senses-blunter, youth-ensnarer,
Crime-inventor, ruin's verge.

Virtue-blastor, base deceiver,
Spite-displayer, sot's delight;
Noise-exciter, stomach-heaver,
Falsehood-spreader, scorpion's bite.

Quarrel-platter, rage-discharger,
Giant-conqueror, wasteful sway;
Chin-carbuncle, tongue-enlarger,
Malice-venter, death's Broadway.

Tempest-scatterer, window-smasher,
Death-forerunner, hell's dire brink;
Ravenous-murderer, wind-pipe slasher,
Drunkard's lodging, meat, and drink!

Taking the "Lye" Out.

"For the last five months," says Smith, the Razor Strop man, in a letter to a friend, "I have been travelling in company with a man who sells soap and cement. He is a first rate fellow, but has been in the habit of taking a little drop once in a while, by way of lathering up his spirits, so that he might the better shave his customers. After hammering away at him for some time, I have at length induced him to sign the pledge, and now he has completely washed his hands from intemperance, and is firmly cemented to the cold water army. There is not so much lye about his soap now as there used to be, and his cement sticks better than ever."

To the Poor Unfortunate Drunkard.

MY FRIEND AND BROTHER,—You are poor and wretched. A horrid appetite hurries you on in the road to ruin. Abroad you are despised. Home is a desolation. A heart-broken wife weeps over you, yet does not forsake you. She hopes, she waits for your reform and for better days. Conscience bids you stop. But appetite, companions, and custom say, One glass more. That is a fatal glass. You rise but to fall again, and you feel that you can never reform. But you CAN REFORM. Thousands and thousands around you have reformed, and would not for worlds go back to drinking. They are happy at home; respected abroad; well dressed; well employed; have no thirst for the dreadful cup. They feel for you. They say, "Come with us and we will do you good." Come sign the pledge, the pledge of total abstinence. In this is your only hope. This is a certain cure. Touch not, taste not, handle not rum, brandy, whisky, wine, cider, or anything that intoxicates, and you will be a new man, a happy man. Begin now. Try it now in the strength of the Lord. From this good hour resolve that none of these accursed drinks shall ever enter your lips. The struggle may be severe, but it will soon be over. Say then, "Come life, come death, by the help of God I will be free."

A Minister Cursed.

At the Temperance Anniversary recently celebrated in Warrington, the following anecdote was related by the Rev. W. Roaf. There was a man whose wife's mother had induced them to break their pledge, on the occasion of the birth of their first child, by telling them that ministers of the Gospel saw no harm in taking a social glass on particular occasions, and that her own minister, a most pious man, did it. They yielded—the man became a drunkard, and once said to Mr. Roaf, when referring to the name and authority of the minister, whose opinion and example had been quoted to his ruin—"I'll curse that man when I am in hell."

[ENTER THE RUM-SELLER.]

Victim—(starting)—Ha! who is there?Rum-seller—A friend; how are you, Joe?V.—Don't take me now! don't (covering his head with a sheet).R. S.—(aside)—He is a little out. Poor fellow! He was as likely a young man as ever came to my store. I'm sorry for him.V.—(looking through a fold in the sheet)—It's him! He's come! Oh, hell! I can't go there. You shan't! You shan't!R. S.—Oh! Joe; be composed. Don't take me for the devil.V.—You are; you are; you sold me rum. I must have rum; give me rum. I'll go with you if you'll give me rum.R. S.—(aside—Poor fellow! how he raves. This is too bad. I wish I had not come.) Come, Joe, be calm. It's your old friend Harford, who kept the little store down at the corner.V.—And sold me rum.R. S.—Come, Joe, how do you feel? I heard you was sick, and I thought I would call down and see you. It's rather late, but my customers have only just cleared out. I've brought that little due bill you left with me, perhaps you can pay it.V.—Take my soul—in pay for rum.R. S.—(aside)—That is too bad; wish I had never sold a drop. Take his soul! Poor fellow! Well, Joe, good night.V.—Don't you take me now? I'll go with you, if you'll give me rum.R. S.—(exit, in a violent perspiration.)—I wonder they don't give him rum. He is a pleasant fellow. I could quiet all his nerves and make him calm as a little child by a warm sling. O these accursed cold water men. They are at the bottom of all this mischief. It is only when men stop drinking that they rave and think of hell. He takes me for the devil, who sold him rum. Horrible! How shall I meet him in the day of judgment! Won't he call me devil then? O my accursed business! But I've a license for it (wiping his forehead). License! A licensed devil! Oh hell! That will be my portion if I don't quit this business, and all for the bad debts I lose by these fellows. Well, if I open shop to-morrow, then my name ain't Bill Harford.

Temperance Speech.

DELIVERED BY HENRY SMITH, THE RAZOR STROP MAN.

At Washingtonian Hall, Boston, Nov. 7, 1847.

Some folks say that it is right to drink alcohol, because it is a good creature of God. Well, grant that it is; so is castor oil a good creature of God; but is that a sufficient reason for a person to drink it, three, four, or a dozen times a day? A dog is a good creature of God; but suppose a dog gets mad, and should rush into this hall and bite a man or a woman, would you let him alone because he was a good creature? Would you be satisfied with cutting off his ear, or his tail, or would you knock him on the head and pitch him head-long into the street? Now alcohol is worse than a mad dog; for a bite from the latter only destroys life, while a bite from the former destroys reason, reputation, life, and everything else, besides dragging the family of the bitten man down to poverty and want.

But alcohol doesn't bite a mouthful at first. When he first snapped at me, he only tickled me a little; I liked it first rate, and was anxious to get another and still another bite. The old tyrant kept a nibbling away at my heels as though he didn't mean to harm me, while I, like a poor fool, kept coaxing him on until at last he gave a "snap," and took the elbows right out of my coat; next, he took the crown out of my hat, the shoes off my feet, the money out of my pocket, and the sense out of my head, until at last I went raving mad through the streets, a perfect victim to alcophobia. But I signed the pledge and got cured; and if there is any man in this hall, who has been bitten as I was, let him come forward and take our tetotal medicine, and I'll warrant him a speedy cure.

Results of License.

The Providence Diadem recounts the following among the results of voting license in that city last winter.

1. An increase of drinking.
2. An increase of unlicensed shops.
3. An increase of pauperism and crime.
4. One woman has been BURNED TO DEATH in our streets while under the effects of rum.
5. Another woman was found DEAD IN THE ROAD, just out of the city, after drinking rum in the city.
6. A young man CUT HIS THROAT in a fit of delirium tremens.
7. Another young man DIED SUDDENLY while on a drinking spree.
8. A colored man was found DEAD ON THE FLOOR after drinking.
9. A poor drunken wretch was found in the streets at night with his foot broken.

10. Eight times, at least, a Coroner's Jury has returned the Verdict, DIED BY INTEMPERANCE!

11. Many respectable persons have died through intemperance during the year.

12. The rumsellers or their tools have SET FIRE TO A POOR MAN'S BARN—they have endeavored to BLOW UP A HOUSE containing two inoffensive men, and SLEEPING SISTERS—out of the city they have PERJURED THEMSELVES to break down a prosecutor in one town, and FIRED A PISTOL INTO THE ROOM of a highly respectable gentleman and a friend of temperance in another.

What is Rum?

I asked an aged man, a man of cares,
Wrinkled, and curved, and white with hoary hairs;
Rum is the Tyrant of the soul, he said,
Ye young and fair, take warning from the dead.

I asked a dying drunkard, ere the stroke
Of ruthless death life's golden bowl had broke;
I asked him, What is Rum? Rum, he replied,
The curse of earth—MY RUIN!—and he died.

I asked a weeping wife; she raised her eye,
All filled with tears, and this was her reply:
Rum dashed from me fond hopes of earthly bliss,
And made this life a cup of bitterness.

Mrs. Sigourney on Health and Dress.

Physical as well as intellectual welfare should be duly consulted. Regularity in the hours of rising and retiring, perseverance in exercise and adaptation of costume to the variations of climate, and temperance in all things are necessary branches of a sanitary regimen. Exercise in the open air should be daily taken by the young. But since it is sometimes impossible to do so, young ladies should acquaint themselves with some forms of domestic industry which will be a substitute for out of door exercise. Riding on horseback and sea bathing are powerful tonics for a delicate tissue of nerves. Without health both industry and enjoyment languish; therefore observe well physical laws.

In dress, avoid such a style as opposes taste, produces deformity or leads to unnecessary expense. Never permit fashion to impair health, for if you do, so the "evil days" of disease will come, "and the years draw nigh," when as far as health is concerned, it must be said "there is no pleasure in them." Stricture in the region of the lungs and heart is deeply perilous. Some knowledge of anatomy is a requisite part of female education, that we may know partially how that "harp of a thousand strings, is made and kept in tune so long." Dress should never infringe on delicacy, nor engross too much time. Simplicity and grace are the elements of its power to charm.

The Gin Fiend.

BY CHARLES MACKAY, LL.D.

From a volume of Poems just published in London as an accompaniment of G. Cruikshank's "Drunkard's Children."

The Gin-Fiend cast his eyes abroad, and looked o'er all the land,
And numbered his myriad worshippers with his bird-like, long right hand;
He took his place in the teeming streets, and watched the people go
Around and about with a buzz and a shout, for ever to and fro,
"And it's hip!" said the Gin-Fiend, "hip! hurrah!—for the multitudes I see Who offer themselves in sacrifice, and die for the love of me."

There stood a woman on a bridge; she was old, but not with years—
Old with excess and passion, and pain—and she wept remorseful tears,
As she gave to her babe her milkless breast; then goaded by its cry,
Made a desperate leap in the river deep, in the sight of the passers by.
"And it's hip!" said the Gin-Fiend, *"hip! hurrah!—she sinks—but let her be,
In life or in death whatever she did, was all for the love of me."*

There watched another by the hearth, with sullen face and thin;
She uttered words of scorn and hate to one that staggered in.
Long had she watched, and when he came, his thoughts were bent on blood;
He could not brook her taunting look, and he slew her where she stood.
"And it's hip!" said the Gin-Fiend, *"hip! hurrah!—my right good friend is he!
He hath slain his wife, he hath given his life, and all for the love of me."*

And every day in the crowded way he takes his fearful stand,
And numbers his myriad worshippers with his bird-like, long right hand;
And every day the weak and strong, widows, and maids, and wives,
Blood-warm, blood-cold, young men and old, offer the fiend their lives.
"And it's hip!" he says, *"hip, hip, hurrah!—for the multitudes I see
That sell their souls for the burning drink, and die for the love of me."*

NEVER FAILING RECEIPT.—If you would have wealth diminished and the pocket-become empty of hard earnings, visit the grocery.

If you would have the means of business fail, and comforts disappear, and griping poverty be your lot, and the faces of those you love grow thin with want, go to the grocery.

If you would have health desert, and sickness shake, and loathsome disease cut through your frame, and death in some frightful shape seize you unaware—become a constant visitant at the grocery.

MAGOUN.

Mr. Wesley's Rule.

Mr. Wesley's rule has been restored by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and now no member can hereafter use or traffic in spirituous liquors without being subject to discipline, and cut off, if he repent not, from the church.

Marsh's Temperance Anecdotes.

This new Temperance Book, seems to meet with public favor wherever it is seen.

Says the Dew Drop,

"Decidedly one of the most entertaining Temperance publications that has been issued from the press."

Says the New-York Organ,

"A useful and highly attractive work."

Says the New-England Washingtonian,

"A truly valuable and interesting work, and will, doubtless meet with an extensive circulation."

Says the Maine Washingtonian Journal,

"Every man ought to have a copy."

Says the New-York Evangelist.

"A multum in parvo, and is full of interest and value. We wish there were a copy in every family in the land."

Says the R. I. Diadem,

"Facts are stubborn things, bulwarks of the Temperance cause. Mr. Marsh has performed a good work in compiling this volume."

Says the New-York Observer,

"Here is ammunition enough (for lecturers), for a whole campaign."

It is a volume 18mo., 180 pages; in paper, 25 cts.; handsomely bound in muslin, 37½ cts. Liberal discounts will be made to booksellers, and all who purchase for benevolent objects. Orders addressed to American Temperance Union, New-York.

Visions in a Valley.

BY E. P. HOOD.

"I dreamt of the city, the mighty, the dim;
 There were rooms where the sunbeams could never pass in.
 I saw the crowds jostle the poor beggar by;
 I beheld him escape to his cellar to die.
 Thin—thin was his cheek, and his poor famished form
 Told many a tale of the pitiless storm.
 He was aged and feeble, heart-broken and wan;—
 Then there entered an angel in guise of a man.
 He broke him a loaf, and he took by the hand,
 Till he led him away to a sweet pleasant land,
 And the angel moved on—there were Anger and Hate;
 He made the foes brethren, and hushed the debate.
 I watched him with beggar-boys, ragged and torn—
 The houseless, the hopeless, bereft and forlorn:
 He taught them, he saved them; I watched while he ran
 To seize on the hand of the poor outcast man—
 The drunkard;—then prompt o'er the waters of blue,
 To break the slave's fetters of iron he flew.
 And where'er came his footprints, or flashed his bright wing,
 New tones and new scenes from the darkness would spring;
 And a voice sung above me—'Oh, spring from the sod,
 For the spirit of Love is the temple of God.'"

Sailor ! There's Hope for thee.

Where ? In the Temperance Pledge. Come and sign and you will save your money, save your health, and save your character. You'll soon have something nice laid up for a wet day—and what's more, you'll soon be standing on the deck as mate, or sitting in the cabin as Captain of some noble ship. 23,000 mariners are enrolled on the books of the New York Mariners' Temperance Society. Sailor! is your name among them? Enlist to day, and you'll have good pay, smooth seas, and a quiet haven.

We ask not "grog courage" so vaunted,
 Let it blow as it never yet blew !
 To ride amidst breakers undaunted,
 Is the vaunt of a Temperance crew,
 To ride amidst breakers undaunted,
 Is the vaunt of a Temperance Crew.

Buena Vista House.

No. 96, Liberty Street, New York,

A few doors west of Broadway, near the Post Office, and business part of the City. This HOUSE has lately been fitted up in good style, and will be conducted on strict TEMPERANCE PRINCIPLES, by R. Churchill. Terms, One Dollar per day, or $6 a week for transient company. Worthy the patronage of temperance men.

Acrostic.

T hou safeguard of the body, purse, and soul,
 E 'er may I live beneath thy blest control ;
 M ild guardian angel of our destiny,
 P roving the genius of true liberty,—
 E nnobling those who do espouse thy cause,
 R egardless of censure, deaf unto applause.
 A loft thy banners gloriously unfurled,
 N ow in sight of an admiring world ;
 C reation smiles wherever falls thy ray,
 E den itself was scarce more fair and gay.

The Razor Strop Man.

IRISH WIT.—An Irish washerwoman of the city was complaining of her hardships to her husband, who was sometimes in the habit of flagellating her. He endeavored to persuade her that her complaints were groundless, and among other arguments, remarked that she always had "plenty of wood and wather in the house." "And ye may well say that," she keenly retorted, "I'll always have plenty ov that while I'm wid you, for I'll niver be widout a stick to my back or a tear in my eye."

JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.—This work has now reached its thirteenth volume, and has had a wide circulation in the United States and in foreign countries. It is a valuable compendium of the whole temperance operation throughout the globe. It is furnished at the very low rate of One Dollar a year a single copy, or five dollars a year for ten copies. Subscriptions received at No. 149 Nassau-st., New York. Money may be forwarded in the mail, in advance.

YOUTH'S TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE.—This pleasant little paper for children and youth, which has had great popularity in schools, has now reached its 110th number, and is furnished at the low rate of nine dollars for one hundred copies a year, at the office of the Union. Parents and teachers of youth can do no better for the cause of temperance than to give it a free circulation.

POPULAR WORKS, TO BE HAD AT THE TEMPERANCE DEPOSITORY, 149 Nassau Street, New York.

Permanent Temperance Documents, 2 vols., 8vo.; Boys' Temperance book; Temperance Fountain; Hannah Hawkins; Nott's Temperance Lectures; Sargent's Tales; Arthur's Tales; Rev. T. P. When all around is well with us,
 With some we know 't is not;
 Aid such to aid themselves, and thus
 We doubly bless their lot.

The Roller.

This is the month when many people prefer to seed down their ground. How much better this work is done now-a-days than formerly! The ploughs are more perfectly constructed, and the ploughmen are much better acquainted with their business. Besides this, farmers now have some ambition about it. There is a laudable pride in having a thing done as it ought to be. Look at a piece of greensward newly turned over. You find it smooth as a dancing floor. Then the roller is the grand and thorough leveller in the important business. There should be one of these implements, at least, in every farming neighborhood. Good economy is never without tools. A roller is an expensive article, and therefore no one should be unwilling to pay for its use. Really, Mr. Grudge, it is small business for a farmer to be loath to part with a few shillings for his own benefit, in the tool line. That newspaper affair now comes to my mind. Do you still borrow of Tom Hardsare? He, honest fellow, but just brings about the year, with his large family, and pays his expenses, two dollars of which are for a newspaper. Shame on you, then, for wanting to read thrifty Tom's paper, every week, for a thank ye.
