FOURTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE
AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

THE fourth Anniversary of this national institution was held in the Rev. Dr. McAuley's Church, Murray street, on Thursday evening, the 14th of May. The house was well filled with a highly respectable audience. In the absence of the President of the Union, Gen. Cocke, of Virginia, the chair was taken by E. C. Delavan, Esq. Chairman of the Executive Committee. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mark Hopkins, D.D., President of Williams College, Mass. and an abstract of the report was read by the Rev. John Marsh, Corresponding Secretary.

On motion, by S. V. S. Wilder, Esq. of New-York, seconded by Professor Hough, of Middlebury College, it was Resolved, That the report be accepted and printed under the direction of the Executive Committee.

The Rev. Dr. Humphrey, President of Amherst College, Mass., offered the following resolution :—

Resolved, That the American Temperance Union contemplate with gratitude to the All Wise Disposer of events, the continued advance of the cause of temperance among the nations of the earth, especially the late extraordinary movements in Ireland, which promise to deliver that beautiful island from the most degrading bondage.

Dr. H. engrossed the attention of the audience for a considerable time, chiefly with the latter topic ; and, with a beauty and force of expression peculiarly his own, elaborately described the deep degradation of Ireland, naturally beautiful, and containing rich veins of intellect, but destroyed by intemperance, and the extraordinary national enthusiasm which was now throwing off the evil ; the work of Theobald Mathew—no, not of Theobald Mathew, but of a higher power, honoring him as the great instrument, and which called for our special thanksgivings to the Ruler of Nations.

John Tappan, Esq. of Boston, offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Rev. Thornton A. Mills, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Resolved, That the American Temperance Union feel a deep interest in the noble-hearted Irishmen who have made America their abode ; and hope that the "Irish heart" here will respond to the call from sweet home, and that they will unanimously sign the pledge of total abstinence from all that intoxicates, and keep it when signed.

The Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, Chancellor of the University of New York, offered the following resolution, which he sustained for half an hour with great ability.

Resolved, That our confidence is unimpaired in the leading measures which have been pursued for the promotion of temperance in our country, and we do urge upon all our friends an active and untiring continuance of them; more especially would we impress upon all, the importance of a firm and consistent example of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Nathan Crosby, Esq. of Boston, offered the following resolution :

Resolved, That the American Temperance Union regard the character of the recent reports of legislative committees as indicative of a great advance of our cause; and though they have not advised to the action asked for by numerous memorialists, yet a uniform acknowledgement of the correctness of their principles, shows that the time may not be far distant when every legislature will shudder at patronizing and legalizing the sale of intoxicating drinks, and will, by suitable statutes, protect the community from its evil influences.

The resolution was seconded by President Hopkins, of Williams College.

Elisha Taylor, Esq. of Albany, chairman of the Executive Committee of the New York State Temperance Society, offered the following resolution :

Resolved, That the reception given by the various Temperance Societies of Great Britain to the delegation of the American Temperance Union to their last anniversaries, was highly gratifying to the friends of temperance in America; and that we hope for the pleasure of soon welcoming to our shores some representatives of those noble associations which are fast working deliverance for our father land.

The resolution was responded to in a speech of much animation by the Rev. Dr. Patton, of New York, one of the delegation. Dr. Patton moved, that the Executive Committee be directed to express the strong sympathies of the American Temperance Union with the people of Ireland in their great temperance reform, and that our reports, publications, and congratulations be immediately forwarded to the Corresponding Secretary of the Irish Temperance Union.

The resolution brought up Mr. Samuel Stewart, recently from Belfast, who, as a representative of the Emerald Isle, was received with much cheering. Mr. Stewart, in a neat and handsome speech, thanked the Americans for the interest they took in his native land, and gave a brief account of the rise and progress of temperance there, especially of its recent wonderful advance under the Rev. Theobald Mathew in the south of Ireland. He fully confirmed the accounts in the public papers.

The Rev. E. N. Kirk concluded the meeting with a short, but powerful speech on the following resolution :

Resolved, That the resolution of the Executive Committee to call a National Temperance Convention in the summer of 1841, meets our full approbation, and that the time has arrived when we should hail with joy a Temperance Convention for the whole WORLD.*

The blessing was pronounced by Dr. Humphrey.

REPORT

OF THE

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A distinguishing feature of the age in which we live, is a resolution to triumph over moral corruption ; a determination to break the chains of the worst of slavery, the slavery of degrading and destructive animalism.

In the age of our childhood, America and France were each struggling for civil liberty. In this of our manhood, we hear a voice from China, from Africa, from the Isles of the Sea, from Ireland, from Britain, from the cold regions of the North, from every part of our free and happy Republic, saying, we and ours will no longer be slaves to the poisonous drug, or the intoxicating cup. The movement is ONE, and it is mighty. If in our own land it has not, as in another, been national and borne onward with an enthusiasm which no benevolent enterprise has before enjoyed, still here it has, in the past year, steadily progressed, and gained, it is believed, a deeper and deeper hold of the affections of our countrymen.

In presenting their fourth Annual Report, the Executive Committee feel it incumbent upon them, first of all to express their grateful acknowledgements to the Great Disposer of all events, that they are still permitted to live and labour in this great and blessed enterprise ; and then to present a brief statement of what has been done in the past year in the cause of temperance in each of the States composing the Union and in foreign countries.

MAINE.

In the State of Maine the cause has been well sustained by the Temperance Gazette, published at Augusta, under the patronage of the State Temperance Union. Two agents have been employed a considerable part of the year in travelling and lecturing. Rev. J. C. Lovejoy, and Samuel Chipman, Esq., the gentleman who has distinguished himself by his careful investigations in the State of New York. Under the labours of these gentlemen, a uniform willingness has been manifested to adopt the comprehensive pledge. A State Convention was held at Augusta on the 3d of October,—an interesting meeting, at which it was

Resolved, That legislative action is among the appropriate means demanded in the present state of our cause, to remove a portion of the evil of intemperance, which no other influence can reach or control; and, that the suffrages of temperance men should aid in elevating those men to seats in our legislative councils, and those only, whose influence, in every capacity, in which they may be called to act, will be felt in favour of the temperance reform.

A memorial to the Legislature, respectfully requesting that the license law be repealed, and a prohibitory law be enacted in its stead, was adopted and sent forth to the people for signatures. This memorial was returned to the Legislature numerously signed, but produced no change in the existing law.

On the 4th of February, the State Temperance Union held its Anniversary. Two hundred and forty delegates were in attendance. The meeting embodied much of the talent of the State, and the discussions were of an high order. The subjects were, the foundations of temperance action; the means of reaching the mass of mind and removing existing prejudice; the importance of a consistent course of conduct in temperance men; legislative action; an hospital for drunkards, and the spirit rations in the U. S. Navy. On the latter subject, an able memorial was drafted and forwarded to Congress. From reports from 69 towns in the State, it appeared that, in nearly all those towns, there were regularly organized temperance societies, about one half of which were on the total abstinence principle; that in sixty of these towns, there are four hundred venders of ardent spirits either in stores or taverns, but that not more than one in forty of these are licensed. Thirty of the returns spoke of the cause as advancing, others as stationary or retrograde. In relation to the influence of the reforms in the State at large, the answers were most interesting and heart-cheering. "Very happy," "very salutary," "most happy," "decidedly good," "great and glorious," are phrases used in the returns to express the results of the cause.

The following resolutions were, with great unanimity, adopted at the meeting.

1. Resolved, That the Temperance Reform, like the religion of the gospel, has its foundation in truth, and consequently the one as certainly as the other must ultimately prevail.

2. Resolved, That, to extend the influence of the Temperance Reform, we must not rest simply in the assurance that it is founded in truth: but means must be employed to bring this truth in contact with the whole mass of mind.

3. Resolved, That, on account of its religious bearings, the Temperance cause is entitled to a prominent place in the efforts and prayers of every friend of Zion.

4. Resolved, That, in the light of political economy, this cause is entitled to the serious attention of the statesman, as well as the christian and philanthropist.

5. Resolved, That there is ground to expect important results from the faithful individual efforts of the friends of Temperance, even in reclaiming those who have become addicted to habits of intemperance.

6. Resolved, That, notwithstanding the importance of individual effort, associated action is essential to the complete triumph of this cause, and that no man does his whole duty, whose influence is not felt in an associated as well as an individual capacity.

7. Resolved, That, in our associated efforts for staying the torrent and drying up the fountains of intemperance, we must never forget the pervading, though silent influence of individual character; and, if we would be successful in any measures that may be adopted to reclaim the inebriate or restrain the retailer, we must see to it that they are prompted by a spirit of love, and backed by a life of consistency.

8. Resolved, That a cause like this should never be suffered to languish for want of pecuniary aid; and every friend should feel it a privilege as well as a duty, to contribute for its advancement.

9. Resolved, That a correct public sentiment, on this as well as on every other subject, should be allowed to manifest itself in every suitable way; that one of those ways is the establishment of good and wholesome laws; that the best and most wholesome laws would be laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage; and it is the deliberate and solemn conviction of this Union, that it is the duty of wise and virtuous legislators to conform their action to this high standard, and as soon and as fast as it is practicable to establish such laws.

In this State, temperance received a severe blow in the Arostook expedition. Intemperance and war are kindred spirits. Where the latter reigns or is only contemplated, the former is sure to rage. What one man can do, has been clearly and happily exemplified in this State. For several years this individual, (the Hon. S. M. Pond, of Bucksport,) has been untiring in his labours, sparing neither time, money, nor effort to purify the county in which he lives; the result is, as clearly ascertained by recent investigations, that less liquor is sold in that whole county, than is sold in a single village in a population of 3000 in another county, where very little effort has been made.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

In New-Hampshire, the cause has suffered, it is feared, a retrograde movement. In a recent address to its friends, the Secretary of the State Society, Edmund Worth, Esq., says,

"A few years since—we could muster a host of valiant cold water volunteers to fight king Alcohol, the deadly foe to human happiness; but where are they now? We fear our forces have suffered for want of suitable discipline and exercise; that some of our officers have fallen asleep, and their soldiers have followed their example or deserted and left the service. We have not the numbers nor the influence, we fear, that we had at a former period. Facts may prove our fears to have been groundless; we wish it may be so. But we are fully convinced that it is time for a general inspection and review throughout the State. There are hundreds who need to be revived—and as many more who appear to be fast asleep—many societies have become extinct, which need to be re-organized, and a new generation has come up which should be instructed and enrolled with the temperance ranks. There is a long neglected work in every town which is calling loudly for immediate attention. Will the friends of Temperance heed this call—are they ready to give it a hearty response?

The State Society is doing comparatively nothing. It has even been impracticable to give, in our annual Report, the state of the cause, for the want of suitable materials."

A Young Men's Total Abstinence Society has, however, been active and given in some parts considerable furtherance to the cause; and recent accounts speak of a cheering revival of its interest in several counties.

VERMONT.

In Vermont, the Temperance enterprise has done more than hold its own, though it has been much sacrificed to party politics. The labours of Mr. Samuel Chipman, employed for a considerable part of the year as a Temperance lecturer, and the circulation of the Temperance Star, an able periodical, have given much clearness and strength to the Temperance principle. Under their influence, the Churches are beginning to act with decision and efficiency, and there are three times as many Temperance hotels in the State as there were in 1838, and they are decidedly the best houses. The annual meeting of the State Society was held at Montpelier on the 15th of October. It was an interesting meeting. In their memorial to the Legislature, the society said,

That, in their opinion, the public good requires that the law authorising licenses for the sale of ardent spirits should be repealed. They have long regarded intemperance as one of the most serious evils which afflict our country. Legislative aid can be efficiently afforded by restricting or interdicting the traffic in ardent spirits. Those engaged in this traffic, reap a pecuniary harvest at the expense of the rest of community. What they thus accumulate, is taken from the pockets of their fellow-citizens without an equivalent; nay, more—for the sake of pecuniary profit, they are permitted to deluge the land with a flood of vice and crime, and to burden it with a load of taxes for the support of criminals and paupers, which they have manufactured.

Your petitioners, therefore, desirous of being relieved from these burdens, and of seeing justice and virtue, and good order prevalent in this State, humbly request your honorable body to enact such laws as will, for the future, restrain this unjust and pernicious traffic.

No legislative action was taken, but, the friends of the cause were able to say, as the present year opened upon them,

The commencement of the year 1840, finds the friends of temperance in Vermont at their posts. If the year just past has not been as remarkable for great advances in the cause among us, as some of the earlier years of the reform, when novelty contributed so largely to its lists of friends, yet we are confident that, taking the whole State together, the principles of temperance have been gaining ground among our people, and while these principles have been spreading over greater surface, they have also deepened as they have extended. A more solid and enduring basis has been laid."

MASSACHUSETTS.

Massachusetts has, in the past as well as the previous year, been the seat of war. The law of 1838, making it penal for any individual to sell spirituous liquors in any quantity under fifteen gallons, met with violent hostility from a large class of men engaged in the trade; and, being viewed by many as injurious to the political interests of the State, it was repealed by the last Legislature, and the State was thrown back upon the former statute, by which County Commissioners were authorised to license as many to sell spirituous liquor to be drank on the premises, as the public good, in their estimation, should seem to require.

The high excitement produced by this opposition to the law, and its operation upon the political interests of the men in power, have brought much reproach upon the cause of temperance; yet it is believed, that it has not materially diminished its strength in that State. The whole has led to a most useful investigation, and brought facts to light, which have powerfully affected the public mind; the retail traffic, the cause of two-thirds of the crime and pauperism of the State, has, for a time, met the frown of public indignation, and been suppressed by public law; and, if the friends of temperance have been foiled in what they considered a wise measure, they have not been deterred from the most zealous and untiring efforts for its continuance and spread. Their number and weight of character, give full assurance of their ultimate triumph. In a speech before the last Legislature, the Hon. Mr. Davis remarked,

That it had been estimated, no doubt correctly, that the number of legal voters was about 123,000. During the last session, petitions had been received from 31,000 males over twenty-one years of age—and these petitions were from about one-half of the towns in the Commonwealth—and from various estimates it appeared that at least one-half of that number of persons, friendly to the law, might be counted on in the towns which sent in no petitions—making in all 45,000 legal voters, who have laboured night and day, in promoting the Temperance cause—or one-third of the whole number of voters. Among the members of the three religious denominations, where Temperance was regarded as of so much importance that no person was admitted as a member of the church who was engaged in the traffic, or in any way promoted the consumption of ardent spirits as a drink, might be reckoned 20,000 le.

gal voters. Besides this, there were 45,000 youth between the ages of five and twenty-one, who were regular attendants of Sabbath Schools, and who, owing to the instruction they thus received, were almost, without exception, interested in the Temperance reform. Three thousand of these every year overstepped the line of minority, and were added to the legal voters of the Commonwealth.

On the 12th of February, a more numerous Convention met in Boston than was perhaps ever assembled in the United States, numbering 1481 members. Of this Convention, the Hon. Samuel Hoar, recently member of Congress, was appointed President.

Mr. Hoar, on taking the chair, said, "that the object of the Convention was to indicate the general course of measures, which it would be proper and expedient to adopt by the friends of temperance at this time." A Committee was appointed to prepare business, of which Rev. Justin Edwards, was chairman. Never, perhaps, did a moral convention meet under more trying circumstances. Two successive Legislatures had made and sustained a law, which would sustain and carry forward a great moral reform. A third, with a new Governor, chosen by the enemies of reform, had thrown open the floodgates of drunkenness, and it became now a serious question, what course the friends of temperance should pursue." The resolutions introduced by the Committee, all had reference to this state of things, and the discussions on these, took their shape from the views which gentlemen had of temperance action on the best interests of the Commonwealth.

The Convention sat two days, discussing and adopting several important resolutions. Among these were the following.

1. Resolved, That, under the Constitution of Massachusetts, 'the people have a right, in an orderly and peaceable manner, to assemble and consult upon the common good,' and that, in the exercise of this right, this Convention has met, and will express their views upon the momentous interests involved in the Temperance reformation.

2. Resolved, That we gratefully recognise the Divine goodness in directing the attention of the community so extensively to the numerous evils of using intoxicating liquor, as a beverage, or furnishing it to be used by others, and in leading such multitudes to abandon those vicious practices.

3. Resolved, That, as the use of intoxicating liquor, as a beverage, is proved by numerous decisive facts to be not only needless but hurtful to the social, civil and religious interests of men, as it tends to form intemperate appetites and habits, and thus destroy the happiness and usefulness of many, and greatly to injure the community, it is the indispensable duty of all to abstain from it.

4. Resolved, That, as the sale of intoxicating liquor to be used as a beverage is as really needless as such use of it, and tends to promote and perpetuate the same evils, it ought to be universally abandoned.

5. Resolved, That all legislation which has licensed the sale of intoxicating liquor to be used as a beverage, was based upon the supposition that such use was required by the public good, and as that supposition is now proved to be erroneous, all such legislation ought to cease.

6. Resolved, That the prohibition of such "private business" and such "pursuits of individuals" as are inconsistent with the public good, and tend to destroy the best interests of the community, is not a "sumptuary regulation," nor is it a violation of any "private right," but it is a proper mode of defending the community from the evils which the "private business" and the "pursuits and employments" of certain individuals are adapted to bring on it.

7. Resolved, That, until the laws of this State, concerning the sale of intoxicating liquors, are fully and firmly established upon the basis of prohibition, and sustained by a correct general sentiment, like the other penal and criminal laws of the Commonwealth, it is, in our opinion, the duty of Temperance men, to vote only for those men as candidates for legislative and executive officers, who are known and inflexible friends of such a course of legislation.

During the sitting of the Convention, a large public meeting was held in the Marlboro' Chapel, which was ably addressed by several distinguished gentlemen. Respecting this Convention, the Rev. Dr. Edwards thus expressed himself to our Secretary.

It was large and interesting. The resolutions were fundamental, and all passed with great unanimity excepting one, the last of the above, about which the committee stood six to five, the chairman not voting, and the Convention were much divided. It was whether they should say, that it is the duty of all temperance men to vote only for those who will go for entire prohibition of the traffic. They did not doubt the correctness of such legislation; but they doubted whether their saying this, as a Convention, at the present time, would be the best means of leading the greatest number to adopt the plan of entire abstinence from the use of intoxicating liquor, as a beverage, and the traffic in it for that purpose. The law, although a good one in principle, and might generally have been executed, and would, in a good measure, have been efficacious, had it not been for political entanglements, yet may have tended in some measure, to lessen the moral efforts of temperance men; upon the continuance in which the triumphs of temperance ultimately depend. It is now repealed, and the friends of temperance are thrown again upon their own efforts, through sound argument and kind persuasion, till the people generally shall become right in principle and practice, and shall so generally call for legislative defence from the evils of poisoning the community for money and other sinister objects, that rulers shall feel compelled by the wishes of their constituents, whatever may be their party politics, to give to the community the protection which they need. And we must continue to operate by light and love, through sound argument and kind persuasion, on the people—the people—the people, till this shall be the case. If legislators will help, it is well, and we ought to be thankful;—if they will not, we must go on without them; and if they license sin, we must show the people that it is sin for them to do so, and sin in any one to accept the license, and sin to sell under, or drink according to it. And when the great body of the people shall be convinced that it is so, and act accordingly, then, and not till then, will it cease. Should the Lord continue to be for the Temperance Reformation, it can go, and will go forward whatever this Legislature or that Legislature, may, for the present do on the subject. Had rum sellers and political partisans let the law stand, it would soon have been executed; of this they were afraid, and so hastened to repeal it. But the triumph of the wicked is short. Nor is that all, but it tends to hasten their downfall; or, in the wise government of Him who doeth all things well, will be overruled for their downfall. "Be not weary in well doing, in due time ye shall reap if ye faint not."

The Temperance publications of this State through the year, have been of an high order. With several distinguished agents, they have advocated the purest and noblest principles of Temperance, and they have done it with a spirit becoming those who profess to be seeking the highest temporal and eternal interests of their fellow men. A system of operations has recently been commenced, which will result, it is hoped, in placing a Temperance publication, monthly, in every family in the State.

RHODE ISLAND.

In Rhode Island, a very active and efficient spirit has been manifested throughout the year. The Anniversary of the State Society was in November. At that time, a report was made by the active Secretary, Mr. Charles Jewett, which shewed that the inroads of the friends of Temperance upon the spirit trade, had been such as to muster all its supporters strong to the battle. In the year previous, in compliance with numerous petitions, the Legislature had referred the granting of licenses to the people. And in Providence, and other large towns, the people had refused to grant any. Great efforts were made for a reversal of the law, but in vain. And again, notwithstanding unparalleled efforts of the grocers and taverners, the tippling trade received the condemnation of the freemen of Providence and other towns. Yet prohibitory laws have done but little toward closing up the nurseries of vice. Agents, lecturers, and a spirited paper, the Olive Leaf, whose circulation has been over 3000 copies, have been employed for enlightening the public mind, and changing the habits of the State, and, if persevered in, must result in the extensive purification of this small State from the degradation of Intemperance. A juvenile simultaneous Temperance meeting on the 4th Tuesday of February last, was held in Providence, of a peculiarly interesting character. The public schools of the City were closed for the accommodation of the children and youth, by order of the School Committee, and the large and commodious house of the First Baptist Society was filled with near 3000 children and youth, whose hearts beat high in unison with the temperance addresses and songs of the occasion.

CONNECTICUT.

In the month of May, 1839, the Legislature of Connecticut passed a law, making it penal for any person in the State to sell spirituous liquors without leave granted from the towns, in town meetings held in the month of January. This put a new face upon the cause of temperance throughout the State. It abolished the license laws of two centuries' standing, and left it with the inhabitants of the several towns to say, whether they would have the retail traffic, the acknowledged cause of insufferable evils. The friends of temperance felt, throughout the State, that there was a call upon them for new and great efforts to spread the facts before the people, which should lead them to reject all application for license to sell. A Convention of all the Societies throughout the State was called to meet at Hartford on the 18th of September. This Convention was composed of 150 delegates. General Brinsmade of Washington, was elected President.

A business committee presented several resolutions for discussion and action, which, for two days, fully engaged the attention of the Convention.

The first resolution declared, That the main object of this Convention, is to promote harmony of views and concert of action among all the friends of temperance in the State, in the discharge of duties imposed on them as inhabitants of the several towns, by a recent law of the State, in relation to the traffic in intoxicating liquors, within their respective limits.

The second, That the recent change of policy in the legislation of several States, respecting indiscriminate traffic in intoxicating liquors, adopting the principle that such traffic is wrong, furnishes decided evidence of the progress of our cause, and calls for devout gratitude to Almighty God, whose gracious hand is recognized in these results.

Other resolutions expressed a satisfaction in the late action of the Legislature; a confidence that, if followed up by wise and energetic action in every town, it would ere long secure a deliverance of the towns from a deep system of injustice and oppression; and it was unanimously agreed,

That it be earnestly recommended to all the friends of temperance in the several towns,

First, To take immediate measures to secure the object aimed at by our last Legislature in their act to regulate the sale of spirituous liquors, by the appointment of efficient committees to ascertain within their respective limits, and to report to school district meetings, weekly or monthly meetings, facts on the following subjects.

- 1st. The effect of the traffic upon those who have been engaged in it.
- 2d. The sickness, casualties, and deaths, occasioned by it.
- 3d. The effect of it on the peace of families and the education of children.
- 4th. Its effects in increasing pauperism, crime and taxation.

5th. The successful results of the temperance reformation. And To unite at the January town meetings, in voting for no sale within the jurisdiction of the State law, except for other purposes than as a beverage.

Toward the close of the session there was a lengthy discussion on the subject of political action. A resolution was offered, urging the friends of temperance to forego, if needful, for the accomplishment of the great object, their political partialities. It was pressed upon the Convention to invite men of all political parties and religious denominations to come up to this work of delivering the land from an acknowledged evil, as they would come to the extinction of a fire, or the removal of a pestilence ; and avowed that, while men should hold a good conscience in relation to political measures, they should choose such legislators from their own party as would, on this subject, promote the great interests of the community.

On Thursday afternoon a committee reported an address to the people of the State ; which was accepted and ordered to be printed. The address was drawn up with much ability, and claimed a wide circulation throughout the State. During the sitting of the Convention public meetings were held, in which a deep impression was made by several distinguished speakers.

During the remainder of the year the friends of temperance were not inactive ; but, from several adverse circumstances, especially the reversion in Massachusetts, and the fear of political evils, but few towns entirely suppressed the retail traffic. In a large number, the friends of temperance consented to throw open the traffic to all, and thus destroy the monopoly which the license law, for two centuries, has created, and which, it is supposed, has been the source of the great evils.

A frequent change in legislation, and a reliance upon it by the friends of temperance, to the neglect of moral influence, has, in the view of many, retarded the cause in Connecticut. But a vigorous resolution has been manifested to press the subject on every mind and heart, until, through universal conviction of truth and duty, the evil is banished from the State. A series of meetings, overflowing with attendants, have been held for discussion in the churches of the city of Hartford, whose results have been propitious.

NEW YORK.

In the State of New York, ever first in this great and benevolent enterprise, a system of measures has been steadily pursued, for a course of years, to break up the retail of intoxicating drinks to be drunk on the premises. Many petitions were presented to the Legislature on the subject in 1837, 1838, 1839. In this last year the number of petitioners amounted to between 30 and 40,000. Reports were made in each of those years in the House of Assembly, but the wishes of the petitioners were not granted. Want of harmony in the petitioners was speciously alleged as a reason for no legislative action; and to obviate this, the Executive Committee of the State Society, ever vigilant in their great work, called a semi-annual meeting of the Society, to meet at Rochester on the 14th of August. The meeting was one of much interest. Near 500 delegates from the various Temperance Societies in the State, were present.

Three plans for ridding the State of the evils of the retail traffic in intoxicating drinks, were proposed and discussed.

First, To petition the next Legislature to abolish the license law, and prohibit by law the retail traffic in intoxicating drinks as a beverage.

Second, To petition for a prohibitory statute, to be sent down to the people for their sanction.

Third, To petition, that it be submitted to the towns to decide, in town meeting, specially called, whether they will have licensed houses.

The second plan was not much advocated; it being a new mode of legislation, and one which the Legislature might think derogatory to their dignity.

The third, being adopted already by three States, democratic in its nature, and calling into action temperance men to secure majorities, at first enlisted many in its favor. But, on a free and full discussion, it was thought that it was not the end which the friends of temperance had in view, and might prove an inefficient means to secure that end—that it permitted the license system in such parts of the State as might wish for it; whereas no Christian and civilized people should permit its continuance at all, since it sanctioned and patronised a destructive traffic—that it afforded no protection to the weak against the powerful, to the temperate and intemperate against the distiller and the rum-seller where these had a majority—that it would be sending the question down to towns to be buffeted about by demagogues, and made, in every village, a sectarian and political strife, until, wearied with unsuccessful toil, burdened with taxation, and tormented with plague-spots of drunkenness throughout the State, another Convention would be called to demand the relief which should now be asked at the hands of law-makers. With these considerations in view, and in great respect for those who would give the licensing power to the towns, the Convention unanimously resolved to send forth memorials for signatures, asking for one thing only, viz. a dissolution of all partnership with the license system, and a statute prohibiting the retail traffic in intoxicating drinks, so far as consistent with the laws of the Union. To this form of petition there was no dissentient; and the unexpected unanimity inspired all with confidence that the course was right, and would ultimately prove successful.

Forms of petition for males and females were proposed and adopted ; and the first Tuesday of October was appointed as a day for simultaneous temperance meetings throughout the State, to make provision for securing a great signature to the memorials.

These petitions assumed the following as undeniable truths :—

“ 1. That the morals of no free people will be better than their laws ; and therefore our laws should not sanction the sale of that which is, beyond all doubt, one of the greatest causes of immorality.

“ 2. That the object of all legislation should be, to promote and secure the greatest amount of happiness, for the largest time, to every citizen, with the least possible attendant evil ; and therefore our legislation relative to the sale and use of intoxicating liquors, to be used for an ordinary drink, should be such as to encourage and strengthen the efforts now making by the self-denying and patriotic, to lessen and prevent the individual, family, social and public misery and woe, confessedly occasioned by the use of such liquors.

“ 3. That no moral enterprise can be carried to its consummation against the laws of the land ; and therefore patriotism and philanthropy alike demand that all laws whose tendency is to immorality, or to prevent the success of any moral enterprise should be repealed, and such others enacted as will encourage self-denial and virtue. And,

“ 4. That the license of any business by law, makes that business respectable and honorable in the estimation of the great mass of men ; and therefore, any business whose usual tendency is to increase pauperism, crime, taxation, and insanity, should never be licensed.”

Before the Convention adjourned, they unanimously resolved, “ That, while life and reason lasts, we will never cease our efforts to prevent the licensed or unlicensed sale and use, for a beverage, of all intoxicating drinks ; and that, until efficient and correct legislation is had by our State, we will yearly importune and petition our Legislature on this subject, and we recommend a like resolution to be passed in every district and neighbourhood meeting throughout the State.”

The 13th anniversary of the State Society was held at Albany on the 14th of February, at the time of the sitting of the Legislature.

The report stated, that, in forty-five counties, there had been formed in the past year, 191 temperance societies ; which, added to the 1,178 previously reported, made the number of societies auxiliary to this, 1,369. The reported additions to those societies, the past year, were 31,258 ; which, added to 160,000, the number estimated in the report of last year, made the present strength of auxiliaries 191,258 members. These have all signed the total abstinence pledge.

The Societies' publications the last year amounted to . 280,534
Equal to 8,530,984 12mo pages. The previous issues were 14,241,710

Making the whole of its publications, scattered over the world, in eight years, 14,522,244
Being all of 625,889,760 duodecimo pages.

The Societies' agents have sold more than 11,000 Temperance Almanacs, obtained about 900 subscribers to the Temperance Recorder, and witnessed 2,619 additions to temperance societies.

Chancellor Walworth was re-elected President ; and the society adopted, with great unanimity, several important resolutions,—

One, recognising the hand of Providence in all the way it has led the temperance enterprise. Another, the labors of the press and temperance lecturers. Another, thanking the Mayors of New York, Brooklyn, Schenectady, Utica, and Buffalo, for withholding intoxicating drinks from New Year's festivities. Another, inviting the American Temperance Union to call a third National Convention. Another, recommending early and efficient arrangements for a temperance celebration of the 4th of July. Another, inviting every clergyman in the State to present the cause of temperance to his congregation on the last Sabbath in June next. Another, in favour of a continuance of the simultaneous meetings on the 4th Tuesday of February. Another, in favour of a Committee to address the several ecclesiastical bodies throughout the United States, urging them to new and more efficient temperance action. Another, in favor of the formation of temperance societies in Sabbath and day schools.

An able memorial was adopted and presented to the Legislature, giving "a strong and eloquent description of the evils of intemperance ; of the prostration of the physical powers, the decay of the mental energies, the loss of memory, the obtuseness of the moral sensibilities, the prostration of self-respect, and the poverty, disease, misery, and crime which are superinduced by the habitual use of intoxicating drinks." It stated, that not only the utter inutility, but also the pernicious influence of alcohol, in all its varieties, as a beverage, had been abundantly tested on the land and on the water, in the torrid, the temperate, and the frigid zones ; so that all doubt may now be removed from the mind of every individual who has the industry to read, and the capacity to reason on the subject.

It called in question both the policy and the morality of the excise regulations of the State, under whose license man may deal out, by law, to his brother man, the germinating seeds of malady, pauperism, crime, and taxation.

It closed by requesting that, in addition to any other legislation which is adopted, "a law may be passed providing for an expression of opinion by the electors of the State of New York, to be taken by the assessors or collectors of each town or ward, whether they wish a continuance or repeal of the present license or excise laws ; with returns, under oath, to be made by said officers, so that by the fifteenth day of February next, the result may be known at the Secretary of State's office."

It was hoped that the numerous and powerful expressions of public sentiment now made to the Legislature, would induce them to grant some relief to the citizens of the State from the evils of the license system. A Committee of the Senate, to whom this and other memorials were referred, fully recognised these evils as insufferable to the community.

In their report, presented by Col. Samuel Young, they said,

That the evils which result from the use of intoxicating drinks are not exaggerated by the petitioners, is manifest to every unprejudiced individual who has carefully examined the testimony which has been collected on this subject; not only in this country but also in the old world. Indeed, it would be difficult to give too deep a coloring to the picture of human wretchedness which springs from this cause. The pecuniary burdens also, which are imposed upon the whole community by the exactions of intemperance, are exceedingly severe.

The committee are informed, and believe, that in 1838, the supervisors of the county of Saratoga carefully examined this subject, in reference to its influence upon the fiscal concerns of that county, and that they came to the conclusion that, of a tax of fifteen thousand dollars which was to be levied, the necessity for the imposition of about thirteen thousand dollars of that sum was traceable, either directly or indirectly, to intemperance.

It would require too much time to allude, in detail, to the mass of evidence which has been collected on this subject in various parts of our country, and which, from time to time, has been spread before the public. An extract, however, from a late learned English writer, which is strongly corroborative of the truth of the American facts and inferences to which reference has been made, may, perhaps, be of use in leading the mind of every inquirer to the proper conclusion.

"That the excessive use of intoxicating liquors," (says Morewood, in his history of inebriating liquors, page 712,) "is productive of incalculable evils to the community at large, is a truth which not even the drunkard himself, in his sober moments, will deny. Were we to examine the prisons, bridewells, houses of correction, penitentiaries, lunatic asylums, and other places of incarceration, we should find a vast number of the inmates of these abodes of human degradation to have been the victims of vice and folly through the inordinate use of intoxicating liquors; while the numerous paupers that unhappily throng every city, town, and village, owe their misery, in a great measure, to the same desolating cause.

Ample testimony of the melancholy effects of drunkenness may be found on a reference to the minutes of evidence taken before a committee of the House of Commons, which was appointed in June, 1834, to inquire into the extent, causes, and consequences of intemperance among the laboring classes of the United Kingdom. Before this committee, were laid scenes of the most appalling nature, arising from the habitual and excessive use of ardent spirits; and it appeared that most if not all of the desperate atrocities which had been committed, were chiefly owing to its influence. It has been estimated, that in England four-fifths of all the crimes in the country have been committed under the excitement of inebriating liquors. During the year 1832 there were taken into custody, by the London police, 32,636 persons for drunkenness alone, not including any of the numerous cases in which assaults, or more serious offences, had been committed under the influence of drink. This statement relates merely to the suburbs of London, without any of the numerous cases that occurred in the city itself. It is, moreover, alleged, that more than one half of the insanity amongst the population is occasioned by inebriety. Of 405 patients admitted into a lunatic asylum at Liverpool, 267 were known to have lost their reason by this vice."

Such is a brief summary of the conclusions which resulted from a long and careful examination of the committee of the House of Commons in England. According to the evidence, most of the pauperism, four-fifths of the crime, and more than half of the insanity which afflict that kingdom, are ascribable to intemperance.

The same desolating influence is strongly operative in this State. Nor can any one who will carefully examine the testimony which has been collected and published during the last ten years, fail to be convinced that more than one-half of all the taxes which are at present annually imposed upon us, originated in this cause. It is this blighting propensity which not only prostrates the body, debases the mind, produces gross immoralities, stimulates to crime, and generates pauperism and insanity, but which also oppresses with heavy pecuniary exactions the industrious and virtuous portions of the community.

But although none escape the evils which are inflicted by this vile scourge of humanity, yet its visitations fall with the most unmitigated severity upon the female sex. The forlorn mother of a family, whose husband is an abandoned drunkard, when she sees her little children around her, shivering with cold and crying for bread, feels the pressure upon her heart of an indescribable load of desolation. And when she looks upon him in whom her fond, youthful hopes were centered, and who had solemnly plighted his faith for her protection and support through life, and beholds the altered, haggard and besotted wreck of all her earthly prospects, she experiences a withering blight of mental agony, far more intense than is felt by the raving maniac. Indeed, under circumstances of such utter hopelessness, a deprivation of reason would be a merciful interposition. Thousands are annually hurried to an untimely grave by this fell destroyer.

Such was the language of the Committee.

And yet, on the mistaken apprehension which would set aside all penal statutes, that the only remedy for an evil which carries such desolation in its course is to be found in public sentiment; that public sentiment may be rectified by moral means, and that when it is so rectified, not by pains and penalties, but by reasoning and information, there will be no need of any statute on the subject, and that until this time all prohibitory statutes would be violently resisted, the Committee came to the conclusion,—

"That statutory provisions would be worse than useless; and that all legal coercion would be pernicious in its effects; that instead of aiding, it would tend to retard the progress of a great moral reform, whose triumphs have already conferred vast benefits upon mankind, and whose final consummation will bestow incalculable blessings upon all the civic and social relations of life."

Thus has the subject again been returned upon the free and enlightened petitioners of this empire State, without one of the reasons on which they urged their petition, being called in question. These petitioners have resolved that while life and reason last, they will never cease their efforts to suppress this traffic, and should they select men to be their law-makers, who feel as they feel on this great subject, and who may consider correct and efficient Legislation here most intimately connected with all the best interests of the State, they would do no otherwise, as far as their suffrages can go, than all other men do in relation to great topics in which they are deeply interested.

The obligation of Temperance men to do this, had been sustained in Conventions in New Jersey and Massachusetts; and it was here tested in the annual meeting of the State Society, by the introduction of the following resolution by E. C. Delavan, Esq.

Whereas, the pledge of the New-York State Temperance Society, the National Society, and all other societies of a kindred character throughout the world, now exerting a favorable influence in the temperance cause, recognize the principle of total abstinence, as a beverage, from all that can intoxicate, as the only sure preventive and safe remedy for intemperance, and make it obligatory on members, "in all suitable ways," to advocate and sustain this principle; therefore,

Resolved, That the New-York State Temperance Society most respectfully suggest to all members of total abstinence societies in the State of New-York, and throughout the Union, as well as all others who desire to see the end of drunkenness, whether consistency as well as the pledge, does not require, and whether it is not "one of the suitable ways," that they withhold their suffrages in raising men to any office, who either make, vend, drink or give intoxicating liquors, to be used as a beverage, and whether by giving their votes for such individuals they are not in fact sustaining the drinking usages of society, sanctioning intemperance thereby, and in a great measure, defeating one of the leading objects the friends of temperance have now in view, viz. obtaining the repeal of the license law, and the prohibition of the retail traffic in intoxicating drinks.

After a brief discussion, the subject was indefinitely postponed.

NEW JERSEY.

In order to draw out in season, for some influence upon Legislative action, the sentiments of the friends of Temperance in New Jersey, a semi-annual meeting of the State Society was called at Newark, on the 14th of August. At that meeting, which was large and highly respectable, the following among other resolutions, were adopted :

Resolved, That, the license system is inconsistent with almost every statute of the State that provides for the punishment of crime, the prevention of evil, or the preservation of the health or morals of the community ; because it gives a legal sanction and reputation to a traffic, the direct tendency of which is to induce violations of all such statutes, as is proved by the records of our alms-houses and prisons, and the calendars of our criminal courts.

Resolved, That, in the opinion of this Society, no other business producing one half the private and public misery resulting directly from the traffic in strong drink, would be tolerated for a moment by the Legislature or the people.

Resolved, That, as it is alleged that the people are not ready for legislative action upon the traffic in intoxicating liquors, it is but reasonable that they should have an opportunity of testing that question ; and that the friends of Temperance desire a law which shall refer the subject to the decision of the people, and make all necessary arrangements for keeping houses of public entertainment without this traffic, and which shall be so framed as to bring the single question before the citizens of the townships, whether they will have this traffic licensed within their limits or not ?

Resolved, That the Executive Committee be instructed to have a memorial prepared and printed embracing the principles of the foregoing resolution, and that they take such measures as may be within their power, to have such memorial presented to every citizen of the State.

Resolved, That, in view of the great importance of having the license system removed, it be recommended to every friend of temperance not to sustain any candidate for the Legislature, who is hostile in feeling and practice to the great objects of the Temperance enterprise, or to the legislation that is necessary to remove the evil.

The memorial was prepared and sent forth for signature by the people of the State.

The anniversary of the Society was on the 1st of January. The Report of the Executive Committee detailed the operations of several agents, and a steady advance of the cause. One of the agents reported in one county the expense of supporting the poor, $11,400 ; 8,550 of which was justly chargeable to Intemperance. In another, the burden upon the county from Intemperance was $6,660. The number of commitments to the Newark prison for the year was 338, nine-tenths of which were for Intemperance. The Society, constituting no small portion of the virtue, intelligence and wealth of New Jersey, felt determined to persevere in promoting the great principles of total abstinence from all that intoxicates, and resolved,

That it is the right and the duty of the people to get rid of the traffic in intoxicating drinks ; and that they ought to memorialize their legislators until the traffic is prohibited ; and to send men to the legislature who will heed their memorials and comply with their demands.

A majority of the Committee of the Legislature, to whom the memorials were referred, reported that "They fully agree with the memorialists that the intemperate use of intoxicating drinks is an evil of great magnitude, and should be discountenanced by every citizen who wishes to promote the happiness and well-being of society, yet they are constrained to believe that further legislation is at this time unnecessary and would not lessen the evil complained of, but on the contrary might act injuriously to the cause of temperance."

PENNSYLVANIA.

Within the year, an extraordinary temperance spirit has manifested itself in the western parts of the State; and, at a large meeting at Pittsburg, the Mayor and a number of the most respectable citizens put their names to the total abstinence pledge. On the 6th of November a respectable Convention of the Temperance Societies in Western Pennsylvania met at Pittsburg. John Clark of Beaver county, was chosen President. During the session it was,

Resolved, That the license system of this commonwealth, in effect, legalizes and makes honorable a business which, more than all other causes combined, opposes that prosperity which it is the duty of all governments to foster and protect, and therefore should be abolished.

And it was earnestly recommended to the friends of temperance, throughout the State, to petition the legislature, at its approaching session, to examine, by committees of their honorable bodies, authorized to send for persons and papers, into the alleged evils of the license system, with a view to such legislation as shall relieve the commonwealth of a disease more fatal than plague or pestilence, and a tax upon her resources, which must ever stand in the way of her prosperity.

To this effect the Convention prepared an unusually able memorial to the Legislature, which was read to the Senate on the 25th of February. They also through a committee addressed themselves to the people of the State.

They passed a resolution congratulating the people of those States in which legislative reform had been effected; and, viewing it the duty of temperance men to carry with them their temperance to the polls, they resolved,

That the duty of consistent temperance men requires them to withhold their votes from men who, they have reason to believe, will disregard petitions for legislative action on the subject of intemperance.

This Convention was preparatory to a general State Convention which met at Harrisburg, the capital of the State, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th of January, during the sitting of the Legislature. This Convention, of which the Hon. E. Kingsbury was President, embodied gentlemen of the first talents and character, and its proceedings were calm, deliberate, but firm and decided, calculated to arouse reflecting minds throughout the State. The Convention seemed deeply impressed with the importance of reorganizing the temperance associations throughout the State, and recommended,

1. That each ward, township, or borough, should form a temperance society, to meet once a month. 2. That all such societies in the county should meet by delegates, once a quarter. 3. That each county association, by delegates, should meet by delegation, in a State Convention, once a year.

On the subject of political action, the Convention felt it extremely desirable that the temperance cause should never be brought into conflict with the politics of the State, so as to be made to bear on its elections. They memorialized the Legislature, and urged all the townships to do the same, praying for the immediate enactment of a law giving to the electors in the several wards, boroughs, and townships, the right of determining, by vote, whether licenses shall be granted for retailing spirituous liquors, within their respective limits; also, providing sufficient penalties for the protection of the community against the unlicensed venders of intoxicating liquors. On the subject of temperance principle, the Convention

Resolved, That the history of the temperance cause has clearly shown that the Total Abstinence principle is the only efficient principle on which to conduct the great work; and that this convention does strongly recommend its adoption by all temperance societies in the State.

An able address was prepared by the Convention and sent forth to the people of the State. It set before them clearly the enormous burdens under which they were groaning; the cost of the vice intemperance to the State, being not less than fifteen millions of dollars, while the income from the license system was less than fifty thousand. It urged them to press upon the Legislature from every township the passage of a law which should leave it to the discretion of every township to license or not license the destructive traffic. "Having secured," said they, "such a law, then the issue will be fairly before the people, in every township and ward throughout the State. Rum or no rum, alcohol, with all its attendant miseries and crimes and poverty and sickness and death, or no alcohol, with all the blessings of temperance. We fear not the result. Truth is mighty, and must prevail. The demon of intemperance, touched by this Ichuriel spear, will stand revealed in all his native deformity, and be banished by the indignant voice of enlightened and virtuous freemen from our land."

As Pennsylvania is the chief seat of Temperance Beneficial Societies, your Committee will here give some account of them, from the report of this convention. They arose in Philadelphia in the commencement of 1836.

"The members of these societies are required to pay a certain fee at their entrance, and to make a specified contribution at the monthly meetings; which constitute a fund for the relief of sick and infirm members. The rates of admission and monthly contribution, vary in different societies; but they are less, in all cases, than in beneficial societies that do not embody the temperance principle; for the obvious reason that the strictly temperate are not as liable to sickness and infirmity as others; and therefore, not so likely to require assistance. Every member is pledged, at initiation, not to make, buy, sell, or use any intoxicating drinks, as a beverage.

It has been found that many individuals will join a temperance beneficial society, who never could be induced to join a temperance society; and that the ranks of the temperance army have thus been greatly enlarged. Nor are these recruits as likely to desert as others: inasmuch as a new and strong motive of self interest is added to their inducements to be temperate. The fact of the small number of expulsions from these associations is proof of this. More interest too is thrown around the cause of temperance, in consequence of the frequent recurrence of the meetings, which are monthly; absence from which is punished by a fine. Moreover, it has heretofore been found almost impracticable to have organizations among the female sex, for temperance purposes; but in the mode here recommended it has been found that they can organize separately, with signal advantage to the cause of benevolence among themselves, and to the cause of temperance at large.

There are now in successful operation, fourteen temperance beneficial associations in the city and county of Philadelphia, one in Chambersburg, and one in Harrisburg.

DELAWARE.

In Delaware the cause has been well sustained by the Standard, a paper of unusual spirit and talent, published at Wilmington. Its friends throughout the State have not ceased to hold up before the people the fact that a great portion of the crime and misery of the State flows from the legalised traffic in intoxicating drink, and that legislative sanction therefore ought to be withdrawn. The Annual meeting of the State Society was held at Georgetown, on the 5th instant; 80 delegates were present. It was a valuable meeting. The Hon. Willard Hall was re-elected President for the year ensuing.

The following resolutions, unanimously adopted, exhibited the spirit of the meeting.

3. Resolved, That the following propositions must now be regarded as established truths, in view, on the one hand, of the facts and arguments that have been brought to sustain them, and on the other, of the silent acquiescence of our opponents:

1. That all use of intoxicating drink, in health, is an abuse of them, and constitutes intemperance.

2. That all such use, being hurtful to those who drink, and by example hurtful to others, is wrong, and ought to be instantly abandoned.

3. That the selling of intoxicating drinks is immoral and sinful.

6. Resolved, That we do not advocate legislation against the drinking of alcohol, but against the making and vending of it, and thus tempting others to drink—against “putting the bottle to the lips” of our neighbors and our children.

7. Resolved, That, in applying for legislative action, it is proper to ask for what is right, and leave to the legislature the responsibility of determining the question of expediency; and that we advise our friends to adhere firmly to this ground.

8. Resolved, That our main dependence is, as it always has been, on the diffusion of knowledge and the exercise of moral suasion, to correct and purify public sentiment; but that the enactment of a law entirely prohibitory, must be the necessary result of a public sentiment enlightened on this subject.

9. Resolved, That we have advised and do now earnestly advise, the friends of temperance and virtue, in the exercise of the elective franchise, to have regard to the character of the candidates for office, and never to sacrifice their principles for the promotion of party: unless we maintain a religious and uncompromising adherence to our principles, we need not expect the leaders of the political parties in our country, in choosing candidates for office, to pay a just regard to our rights and feelings.

MARYLAND.

In few of the States has the temperance spirit been better sustained than in Maryland. The Temperance Herald, published at Baltimore, has continued to lift up its voice with great energy against all use and traffic of intoxicating drinks. The great hindrance to the advance of the cause, was the continuance of the old pledge as the bond of union and basis of action. To remove this, a Convention for the State and for the District of Columbia was held at Baltimore, on the 4th of September, the Hon. Stephenson Archer presiding, at which the subject of the pledge was fully discussed, and a memorial to the Hon. General Assembly of Maryland on the license law was adopted; after which the Convention adjourned to the 27th of November. At the adjourned Convention, the Total Abstinence pledge, the pledge of the American Temperance Union, was unanimously adopted.

Of this Convention, said the Maryland Temp. Gazette, its effects, cannot fail to be such as must gladden the heart of every true Christian and patriot. Its effect must and will tell on the minds and consciences of the people. The convenient half-way house, where a temperance man, under the spirit pledge, could stop and refresh himself with a little mountain-dew, disguised under the name of wine, and then go and write his philippics against intemperance, has closed doors. And notwithstanding the fears of some, that we should injure the cause, and drive away many of our best friends, we have no apprehension whatever as to the result.

The 9th Anniversary of the State Society, was held at Annapolis on the 28th of Feb., at which an interesting and cheering report was read by Christian Keener, the Cor. Sec. From this report and from numerous reports from auxiliaries, it appeared that the cause had been progressive in the State, and that the increase of members had been, during the year, three thousand. County Conventions had been held in several of the Counties. The formation of Juvenile Associations had been much encouraged, and several large public meetings of the youth, that had formed themselves into such associations, had been held.

The Young Men's Temperance Society in Baltimore had been reorganized, and was busily engaged in forming Temperance Societies in all the fire companies of the city. The numerous memorials to the Legislature on the Licence law met with no favor, but the friends of temperance, like the importunate widow, are resolved to persevere.

VIRGINIA.

In Virginia, it is believed, there has been little or no action on the subject of Temperance during the year, excepting that a few memorials have been presented to the Legislature on the license law from some localities in the interior of the State. One individual, indefatigable in the cause of Temperance, obtained by his own exertions in Western Virginia, 432 signatures. The pledge of Total Abstinence from all that intoxicates, has, as yet, met with but little favor from men who control public sentiment; and societies, once prosperous under the old pledge, have generally ceased from all action.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A new and excellent spirit has, during the year, actuated the friends of Temperance in North Carolina. A number of delegates from different counties met on Sept. 11, at Salisbury, for the purpose of calling a State Convention. A spirited address was prepared to the people of the State, and a Convention was called to meet in Salisbury on the 6th of November. The Convention was most gratifying to the friends of the cause. A large number of intelligent gentlemen were present, and considerable important business was transacted. Measures were taken to sustain an agent for a year. A Committee was appointed on statistics, and another to report on the license law. The Committee on statistics reported that, within the bounds marked by the societies represented in the Convention, the cause was generally progressive. There were 22 societies represented in the Convention, having in them 3599 white members and 240 colored. In some neighborhoods, distilling and retailing are abandoned, and in more than two-thirds heard from, the cause is reported advancing. The first formed society was at Bethany Church, Iredell Co., formed Jan. 22, 1829. The largest is at Rocky River, having 400 white, and 150 colored members.

The following were the views of the Convention relating to the license law:

"The retail law is the fruitful source of pauperism, crime, disease, and death; it greatly increases the amount of taxation, multiplies the number of widows and orphans, and entails poverty and misery on many disconsolate wives and helpless children.

That such a law should have remained so long on the statute books of England, and of most of the States of the Union, is perhaps more surprising than that it should ever have passed in either country. The legislatures of a few of the States of this Union, have wisely and nobly responded to the wishes of the benevolent, and yielding to the still more powerful appeal made to their sympathies, by the scenes of wretchedness produced by this system, have repealed the License Law, and thus delivered their States from the evils resulting from the legalized retail of ardent spirits.

The beneficial effects of such legislation, it is believed, are clearly seen, and sensibly felt already in those States. This committee cannot believe that the sound sense of the people of this State, will allow them to linger behind in this noble reform, while, as a State, we are emulating the most enterprising in every other species of improvement.

The legislature seems to have indicated a consciousness, that the system was iniquitous and mischievous in forbidding the sale of ardent spirits around the University of N. Carolina within the limits of five miles, and in enacting the same prohibition in relation to Davidson College within two miles.

We greatly rejoice that the legislature has been so careful to protect the young men of those institutions from the blighting influence of the spirit-seller, and can only regret that the youth of the whole State are not equally protected by the general extension of such wholesome laws.

OHIO.

The Western Temperance Journal has been continued at Cincinnati with good reputation. But Ohio has suffered from the want of an efficient and good organization; yet, in many places the temperance effort has been highly becoming the great cause. Several memorials on the subject of the license law were presented to her Legislature, which were referred to a Committee. In their Report the Committee say,

That they are well satisfied that public opinion in Ohio is decidedly against the use of intoxicating liquors of every description as a common beverage; and that the formation of temperance societies, in almost every neighborhood in this State, has contributed largely in the formation of this correct public opinion. The unwearied and efficient exertions made by the ladies of Ohio, for the last eight or ten years, in suppressing the vice of intemperance, is worthy of all praise and commendation, and demands at our hands, our most profound reverence and congratulation. Your committee confidently believe that public opinion, sustained by such powerful auxiliaries, will, within a very short time, bring about a general reformation, and that, without any further legislative action, the evil of intemperance will not exist amongst us. Your committee are irresistibly brought to the conclusion, from the history of all ages and of all countries, that any business or habit so long pursued, with the consent and approbation of the people, as has been the manufacture and retail of spirituous liquor, never can be successfully abolished by legislative action. This opinion is sustained and established by the recent action of the legislature of Massachusetts, on the subject of retailing spirituous liquors.

Believing, then, as your committee do, that public opinion is the only effective remedy for this evil, and that it already has, in some good degree, lessened the quantum of intemperance in Ohio, and will ultimately do away the evil in the land, your committee ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

INDIANA.

In Indiana, there has been less public action in the past, than in former years. The Committee have been unable to gather anything marked and decisive.

MICHIGAN.

The Annual meeting of the State Society of Michigan, was held at Jackson, on the 11th of Feb. and from the report made, it was manifest that the temperance reform was not in keeping with the increase of population and improvement of the State. Distilleries and liquor dealing establishments are very numerous throughout the State, and hold up an unblushing front. The friends of temperance, however, have not been inactive. A number of petitions were sent to the last Legislature, praying for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. These were referred to a select Committee. The Society, at its annual meeting, passed a resolution expressing its high approbation of the Legislative action in Tennessee, Massachusetts, and other States in the retail traffic, and resolved in employing a State Agent for the coming year, and establishing a State Temperance paper.

KENTUCKY.

In several of the Counties of Kentucky, spirited conventions have been held during the past year, and the friends of temperance have come up promptly and fearlessly to their Legislature and demanded a removal of those laws which legalize the traffic and continue drunkenness in the State. The Committee on the laws promptly and manfully met them, and acknowledged the truth and importance of all the facts set forth in the petitions.

From a review of the whole subject, said they, connected with past experience, the Committee are of opinion, that the law heretofore enacted, authorizing the sale of alcoholic liquors, has by no means prevented or suppressed the crime of intemperance: on the contrary, it has greatly increased it. Time was, when these results of the traffic were unthought of or unknown, but light has come upon us, and in that light a new law hath revealed itself; it is founded in moral justice, and is eternal; it is no longer unpublished or unknown to the world; it has been written as it were by the finger of God; all have read it, and ought immediately to obey it. It forbids man, under the penalty of its malediction, to deal in this poison—it forbids him to scatter it like firebrands, arrows, and death, among the human family. The individual, therefore, who traffics in this poison, knowing the wide-spread ruin which results from his agency, is, in the eye of Heaven, responsible for all, and merits the reprobation of his country. It has been said by some, that the granting of license to retail spirituous liquors is a source of revenue, that it would be unwise to repeal the laws on that subject. But the granting of license to sell spirituous liquors has never been, and ever will be, a source of revenue to the State; so far from it, it has been the prime cause of the loss of many thousands to the treasury. And, although the public opinion may not be fully prepared for a total repeal of the license laws, yet your Committee rejoice to know that public sentiment is fast approximating to that desirable end, and they believe that the time is near at hand when the people, with an almost united voice, will acquiesce in the total repeal of all laws authorizing the sale of alcoholic drinks, except as a medicine, or to promote the arts. Therefore,

Resolved, That so good a cause invites the aid and calls to its support the philanthropist, the moralist, the Christian, and the patriot.

Resolved, That the numerous petitions made to the present Legislature, and the language therein expressed upon this subject, argues well for the triumph of this too long neglected cause, and a determination in our fellow citizens to throw off this tyrannical yoke.

Resolved, further, That this important subject be again referred to the body of the people, that the friends of reform may use every laudable effort to gain strength, march up in solid phalanx and give the finishing blow to this relentless foe.

TENNESSEE.

A majority of the committee of the Legislature on the tipping house act of 1837-8, reported a bill in favor of its repeal. A minority made an able counter report in which they considered the power of the State to enact the law; the utility and effect of the provisions of the law upon the community, and the effect which would follow the repeal. They shewed that the effect of the law had been to check crime, to advance the pecuniary interests of the State, and to promote public and domestic happiness. They stated that previous to the passage of the law, 700,000 dollars were expended in the state for ardent spirits, one half of which went abroad in cash for the article. Since the passage of the law the importation into Nashville has been almost abandoned. Crime was occasioned by the retail traffic more than by any thing else. Of 154 convicts in the State Penitentiary, 61 confess that they committed their crimes while in a state of intoxication; 82 admit that they were occasionally drunk ; 6 only proved to be sober. The whole effect of the system was to dispose the mind to its commission ; to abstract time and labor from honest industry ; to involve the honest citizen in debt ; enervate the body and pollute the mind ; annihilate the ties of attachment and love ; cast upon the world the innocent and helpless, and consign to infamy and punishment the ill fated votary of the tippling house and dram shop. They affirm that no evidence that a repeal of the law was demanded was furnished ; that there were two petitions throughout the State against the repeal to one in favor, and that the press, throughout the State, was in favor of a continuance of the law. The subject agitated the Legislature during much of its session, and finally the opponents of the law failed of gaining a repeal. The cause of temperance is onward in Tennessee.

ILLINOIS.

The flourishing Society of the State of Illinois held its anniversary on the 3d of Dec. The Report of its Executive Committee was of an able and interesting character. It showed, in the support of an Agent, Mr. Turner, a part of the year, and in the circulation of 80,000 copies of the Temperance Herald, and 20,000 Almanacs, an activity and efficiency of which the Society may well be proud.

Three hundred Societies now exist in the State, and their number of members is 30,000. Many retailers have during the year given up the sale of intoxicating drinks, and several taverners have abolished their bars. In one village, six grog shops out of seven, have fallen. Public sentiment is widely stamping the business with disgrace. The fires of no distillery have in the year been extinguished, but several have been lighted up. Several signal cases of reform from drunkenness have been reported. The most important achievement of the year has been the repeal of the old license law, and a reference of the license question to the towns.

The operation of the law has already been salutary. In several counties, and in a large number of towns, petitions have been circulated, praying that licenses may be withheld, and in nearly every case that we have heard from, where the effort has been made, majorities have been obtained ; in some places, nine tenths of the legal voters have signed the remonstrance.

The chief difficulties and discouragements with which the society has had to contend, are the defection among the pledged friends of the cause ; the ephemeral character of many of the efforts to promote it ; the ever changing character of the population by the perpetual influx of foreigners ; the small amount of religious and moral influence existing, and the fact that so many professors of religion are engaged in the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

No State, however, has brighter prospects for Temperance than Illinois.

MISSOURI.

A powerful band of temperance men have been combined at St. Louis, who, in conjunction with the friends of the cause in Illinois, have sustained an able temperance paper, and who have supported as an Agent in the State during the year Mr. Timothy Turner, well known for his efficient labors in New York and Illinois. The strong holds of Intemperance have many of them been broken down, and much seed has been sown here which cannot fail, with little watering, to spring up and bear fruit. At the annual meeting, on the 5th of Dec., the total Abstinence pledge was adopted by the State Society.

MISSISSIPPI.

The bold and decided stand taken by the Legislature of this State the last year against tippling houses and dram shops, in passing the law forbidding the sale of spirituous liquors in any quantity less than a gallon, has given general satisfaction. An attempt by a few, who complained of its being anti-republican and an invasion of rights, to have the law repealed at the last session, proved unsuccessful. The statute throughout the State, is represented as well observed, and highly beneficial.

LOUISIANA.

Louisiana is not without strong friends of temperance. Not a few here have given their time, influence and money to establish the principle of total abstinence from all that intoxicates. How much, and what has been done in the past year, your committee have been unable to determine.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

In this State the temperance cause has been pressed onward with an energy and zeal which has given great pleasure to its friends throughout the Union. A weekly journal of unusual talent, the South Carolina Temperance Advocate, has been conducted at Columbia under the auspices of the State Temperance Society. So far as it has been circulated, it cannot fail to have made a powerful impression. Early in the year the Executive Committee sent a circular to every town, village and neighborhood, asking answers to eighteen important inquiries. During the autumn, large meetings were held in some of the principal towns; spirited and important resolutions were adopted, and memorials to the Legislature were proposed for the signature of the people. In these memorials the evils of the indiscriminate traffic in intoxicating drinks, especially upon the slave population, were strongly depicted, and the petitioners asked for some enactment which should confine these liquors to the shelves of the apothecary. The memorials were ably sustained before the Legislature by two distinguished gentlemen, Judge O'Neal and Mr. Rhett. The Committee to whom they were referred fully acknowledged in their report the correctness of all the statements in the memorials; but came to the conclusion that any legislative action suppressing the traffic would be inexpedient and injurious to the cause of temperance. But the decision has not daunted the friends of temperance in their great enterprise, and another year may return a Legislature more favorable to their views. In this State, the principle of total abstinence from all that intoxicates is less predominant among the friends of temperance than in other States, and they will probably find, ere long, to their bitter experience, that, while they have labored and toiled to save their laboring population from drunkenness and themselves from the burdens of heavy taxation for crime and pauperism, their own sons, on vinous and fermented drinks, may be falling into the drunkard's grave. Surely the high minded and chivalrous people of South Carolina will not long consent to so degrading an influence.

GEORGIA.

In Georgia, but little definite public action has occurred in the last year; though in several counties the cause has been pressed onward with a commendable zeal. No report has been received.

WISCONSIN.

The Wisconsin Territorial Society was organized in March, 1839, and its first anniversary was held at Troy, on the 13th of Feb. of the present year. The delegation was respectable, and the spirit manifested promised great good to the Territory. A Constitution was adopted, having for its basis the total abstinence pledge. The proceedings respected the great moral interests of this rising country, the license laws, the suppression of distilleries, the formation of local societies, temperance hotels, and the character of rulers. On the latter subject, the following resolution was adopted.

Resolved, That, in the election of men to political offices, it is the duty of temperance men to inform themselves respecting the character and views of the candidates in reference to this subject, and that the preference should be given to men of sound temperance principles and habits.

A spirited address was sent out to the inhabitants of the Territory. We appeal, said they,

To you in behalf of this, our adopted Territory, to take such a stand as the present crisis demands. The domestic happiness of our population, the success of our moral and social institutions, as well as our true political economy, are now at your disposal. By a united effort, you may free Wisconsin from one of the most blighting and withering curses ever inflicted upon the human race; a curse coeval with our nation's existence, more demoralizing to man, more destructive to human happiness and to our race, than a combination of all other vices that mar our country's history.

The nations of the earth are putting on habiliments of morals, and intellectual refinement; and shall we limit our aims to the track which generations gone by have trod; nay, fellow citizens, let us rather strive to stand in the foremost rank, and let our social and political institutions become a beacon light to those afar off. Permit us then to contemplate the relative position, which the people of Wisconsin would occupy before the civilized world, were the traffic and use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, to cease from the period of our political existence as a State! Were patriotism and philanthropy ever called to nobler deeds of action, than the accomplishment of such an achievement as this? What friend of humanity can but breathe a wish that such a blessing may crown the birthday of our sovereignty? who that loves his country, will not regard the attainment of such an object with complacency?

We would call upon all who have regard for the temperance enterprise, to rally around its standard, and hasten on its speedy triumph. Never was there a nobler incentive to action, than is presented to the people of Wisconsin, to crush at once this demon of human happiness. Not the laurels of the conqueror on the battle field, nor the purpose of the crusaders to rescue the holy city from the tread of infidel feet, are half so fitting the commendation of the enlightened age, as he who wars the foe intemperance, and seeks to drive him from our soil. Friends of freedom and of temperance, will you come to our aid, and to the rescue of your country? If you will, then with united voice will we send up a thunder shout—WISCONSIN IS FREE!

IOWA.

In Iowa, a Territorial Society was formed on the 25th of Dec. 1839, on the principle of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors. Robert Lucas, Governor of the State, was chosen President, J. M. Robertson, Cor. Sec. Gov. Lucas delivered an address, showing that the prosperity of the territory depended on the prevalence of temperance principles, and that the formation of the Society might be regarded as a most auspicious omen of their future greatness.

The same distinguished magistrate, in his speech at the opening of the Legislature, thus called their attention to the subject.

The principle of raising a revenue from license to vend or retail intoxicating drinks, appears to me, to partake much of the character of legislating indulgence to commit crime. The venders of ardent spirits or other intoxicating drinks, though they may be legalized by license, are, in my opinion, morally accountable for all the crimes and wretchedness produced by the use of such ardent spirits, or other intoxicating drinks vended by them, whether wholesale or retail; and I would recommend the passage of a law repealing all laws now in force in the Territory that authorize the granting of license to vend or retail ardent spirits, and leave the subject entirely under the control of public opinion, holding the keepers of public houses and groceries, accountable under heavy penalties for permitting drunkenness or disorder about their respective houses.

From this general view which your Committee have been able to present of the operations in each State during the year, they feel warranted in saying, that the temperance zeal and action of the country, as yet, is unimpaired. If there has been a change, it has been in the special object of attention, and in the character of minds which have been brought into action. That powerful effort which was formerly made to break up the drinking usages of the community, has been brought this year to bear upon the laws which uphold and legalize the traffic in intoxicating drinks. Its numerical strength is believed to have exceeded any before arrayed against the destructive evil. More minds have been employed in investigating the nature and sources of intemperance, in considering its connection with the pauperism, crime, and general disorder of the community, and in searching out the surest and most practicable remedy, than at any former period. But it is not so much at the number, as at the character of these minds that your Committee look. The men who have composed these numerous State Conventions—who have guided and controlled these State Temperance Societies—who have drafted, signed, and advocated, these memorials to our Legislatures, have, as a body, been inferior to none of their countrymen in intellectual or moral force, in practical wisdom, pure patriotism, or genuine philanthropy. Here, your Committee believe, lies the strength of the temperance movement. It is the combined intellectual and moral force of the nation. The results before us of efforts which have been made, are neither entire triumph nor disastrous defeat. In the States of Tennessee and Mississippi, the laws which were made, at a previous year, for the promotion of temperance, have been sustained. In Massachusetts, they have been reversed. In States where the question of license has been referred to the people, to be decided in town and county meetings, as in Rhode Island, Connecticut and Illinois, the results have been various, but favorable, it is believed, to the cause of temperance. In other States, where memorials numerously signed, have been presented to the Legislatures praying for a repeal of the license laws, the Reports of the Committees have, with surprising uniformity, acknowledged as correct, all the great facts set forth in the memorials, though from political expediency, they have recommended no immediate action. By none has it been supposed that legislation alone could ever effect or foster a moral reform, or that the best of laws in a free republic, could be enforced if two-fifths of the people were from principle and will opposed; much less, that any good would come from frequent changes in the statute book: but the friends of temperance in every State do feel that they have asked for that which is right,—that which is for the best interest of the community,—that which approves itself to the consciences of the legislators, and that which will be granted when other interests, which now appear more important, shall be uninjured; that they have every encouragement, therefore, notwithstanding a few reverses, to labor with the people, until the people make one simultaneous effort to throw off the burden. Better then will it be for them, and better for the venders.

“I know,” said a vender, “the sale of liquor is a great evil. It is the cause of the death of thousands of our fellow beings every year, but what can I do? I am engaged in keeping a public house, and I cannot get a living without selling liquors, while my neighbors sell. If the laws were altered so that no one could sell spirituous liquors, then I should be as well off as my neighbors, and some plan be adopted by which we could all get a living!”

To a wide extent, the State Temperance Societies, with the active county and local societies, have now adopted the total abstinence pledge. The American mind is no longer without full instruction on the point, that there is but one intoxicating principle, Alcohol, the fruit of fermentation, found therefore, in different degrees, in fermented, and distilled liquors, and producing in each, the same detestable drunkenness;—that wine is and always has been and always will be a “a mocker,” and that the man seeks his own destruction who discards as unsatisfactory the springs and fountains of the God of nature.

In some States a large signature has, during the year, been obtained to the pledge. The State Society of New York reports 31,258. The New York City Society 14,729. The missionaries of the American Home Missionary Society 75,000. Indeed, throughout the country, all, whose hearts are at all placed upon delivering our land and the world from the evils of intemperance, not less, it is believed than TWO MILLIONS in number, now, with great uniformity, abstain from all that intoxicates.

Some of the most extensive and beautiful celebrations of the last National Independence, in which were engaged men of the first standing in our country, were upon total abstinence principles. Several of the Mayors of our cities responded on the same principles, to the congratulations of their fellow citizens on New Year's day. And we have the happiness to state that numbers of highly respectable men, who thought these principles either uncalled for, or unscriptural, or injurious to the great cause, and did not for a season co-operate with us, instead of leaving the ranks in disgust and laying down their arms from the conflict, have fully adopted them, and are giving them, in their respective spheres, all the weight of their influence.

Drunkenness is still in the land, a most deplorable and heart-rending evil. Our laws, institutions, and habits, have for a century been constructed to foster it. The trade of the country labors for its production. Almost every public house is specially ordained for its increase and perpetuity. On every holiday, at public dinners, social parties, the political caucus, on days of election, at the national jubilee, a vast array of means is provided tending direct to the horrid result. And, as laws and institutions govern the morals of a people, it is surprising that we are not a nation of drunkards. How great the evil is, your Committee have not the means of determining. But it is very great, especially among two classes of persons : First, the very lowest of society, the ignorant, vicious, and degraded of our cities ; the poor ignorant foreigners that flock to our shores, and ill-fated but kind-hearted seamen falling into the hands of inhuman landlords. With multitudes of all these, impoverished, maddened by licensed and unlicensed grog shops, our police courts, penitentiaries and alms-houses are incessantly crowded. Second, young men of rich and respectable families, gifted perhaps with every noble quality, talented, generous, yet reckless of money, time, and character ; flashing, blazing, dashing onward, crying, "away dull care," soon becoming, over their sparkling champagne, and rich madeira, and brandy, and mint julaps, and heel taps, and night caps, miserable beings, breaking the hearts of relatives and friends, and, amid the ravings of the brain-fever, becoming the early tenants of a cheerless grave. If the statistics of these blasted hopes of the opulent families of our cities could be collected, it would, your Committee are confident, appall the community.

But the reform in our country has been of a wonderful, and blessed character. He who casts his vision back only a single year, or confines it to some spot in which there has been but little action, may not see it. But the man who, with an unprejudiced eye and careful scrutiny, will look back twenty years, and examine the social and domestic customs, the farms, the trades, the manufactories, the fisheries, the shipping of our country, will find that we are not the degraded people we once were. Towns and villages, which annually consumed 10 or 20,000 gallons of spirituous liquors, and double that of fermented, drank by all classes, at all times and on all occasions, and where it was positively disreputable not to have, to use and to give them, will now meet his eye, prosecuting nearly all their business and pleasures without them, and he will see the traffic abandoned and forsaken as utterly disreputable and at war in all its branches, except the medical, with public sentiment. Philanthropists he will find looking no where else for the chief causes of crime and poverty but to intemperance ; political economists satisfied that no prosperity can be enjoyed but by a temperate people ; jurists and statesmen agreeing that, without the intoxicating cup, we should scarce need the work-house and penitentiary ; law-givers acknowledging that such provision should be made in the Statute Book as will secure universal temperance ; freemen associating to elect men to be magistrates and legislators who will make such provision ; ministers and churches not only acknowledging that temperance is essential to the prosperity of Zion, but considering the man who persists in manufacturing, vending, or using intoxicating drinks utterly disqualified for Christian communion ; men of the first standing and influence in the community, men of talents, wealth and piety devoting to the promotion of the cause of temperance all their energies ; and every where, he will hear the results of this great reformation pronounced, as in the Maine reports, " very happy," " very salutary," " most happy," " decidedly good," " great and glorious."

Your Committee believe that, throughout the Union, there has been no diminution of interest in temperance publications. In some States it has been all the reverse ; while the talent and sound principles displayed in their columns, have commanded the attention of the political economist and statesman as well as the philanthropist and Christian. To the 14,241,710 documents issued in former years, the New-York State Society, most energetic of all, has this year added 280,594, making 14,522,244 documents, which in eleven years it has scattered over the world, expending during that time $148,409 96. Your Committee have been enabled to sustain the Journal of the Union ; not however without heavy drafts on their respected Chairman, whose munificence they would here gratefully acknowledge. Of this they have issued during the year 126,050 copies, sending it to every part of the nation, and to different and distant parts of the globe, and they have the satisfaction of finding it well received as a judicious and firm supporter of fundamental temperance principles. They have also been induced to issue for the special benefit of the rising generation, a Juvenile Temperance Advocate, of which they have scattered in six months 60,000 copies, chiefly through the kind agency of Sunday Schools in our large cities. Both the political and religious press have given our cause cheerful support, for which we cannot be sufficiently grateful.

But, the Committee feel, that, in the supply of the American people with temperance facts and principles, there is a lamentable deficiency. Among fifteen millions of population, there are not sent forth more than 50,000 temperance publications monthly, whereas, if we would carry conviction, as we may, to the American mind, we should issue hundreds of thousands. Nothing is wanting to do it but the means, which the friends of temperance, now two millions in number, could easily furnish. The Massachusetts Temperance Union have devised a plan to put a temperance paper, monthly, into every family in the State that will receive it. Should it be successful, other States may be induced to follow the example.

Your Committee would express their gratitude to the fountain of all wisdom, that they and others who have conducted the Temperance Press, have been guided into so much truth, and preserved from errors which might have proved destructive to the temperance cause. Such a flood of light has burst upon the public mind relative to the deceptive and poisonous character of intoxicating drinks, and the connection between those drinks with poverty and crime, disease and waste of human life, as to astonish and confound even the scientific and observant. The conductors of the Temperance press, in making the exposé, have been charged with the highest imprudence, and considered as subjecting themselves to severe civil judgments. But every examination has resulted in their acquittal, showing, that God is with us and that the world will be delivered from these base delusions.*

Your committee believe, that were the public mind as well informed on the character and tendency of all wines and other fermented drinks, on the frauds practised in their manufacture, on the extent to which distilled spirits and deadly drugs are introduced into them, as they are on the common spirituous liquors, there would be found very little hostility to the prohibition of the free and indiscriminate sale of all that intoxicates, to be drunk on the premises. They feel that it is incumbent, therefore, on the friends of the cause to bring out the facts in the case, to show what is, and always has been, the result of wine drinking in France and other wine-producing countries;† of beer drinking in England; of cider drinking in New England; what is the real potency of the intoxicating principle in all that is offered in the markets, and what are the secrets of the trade by which cider and whiskey are turned into wine, and the deadliest drugs are conveyed through the brew-house into the human system, to poison and kill the blood and prepare men for an early grave.‡

In the summer of 1838, your committee addressed a circular to the Marine Insurance Companies of the United States, urging them to favor temperance steamboats by a reduction of their premium. Some favorable action on this point, had been had in the offices in Cincinnati, which now return ten per cent. of the premium on all such boats. And to press the subject farther, the committee, at the suggestion of Gen. Cocke, the president of the Union, he himself generously offering the sum of $500 to defray the expense, appointed the last autumn, Mr. Augustin Chester, of Cincinnati, to visit all the Insurance Offices, and Companies owning and navigating boats at the west, and, by his personal influence, effect the desired object. Mr. Chester has prosecuted his mission with a due degree of diligence. He has visited the offices and companies from Wheeling to Mobile, and laid before them the important subject. Some readily acceded to his proposals, while nearly all gave them their respectful attention. There are, he estimates, about 100 Insurance Offices in the west, and he thinks that all, but about half a dozen, have adopted or will adopt the resolution to deduct ten per cent. in favor of Temperance boats. "In this operation," he says, "if carried out, you have struck upon the most effectual and perhaps only plan to effect a radical reform in this western world."

The character of our shipping, almost universally reached by the Temperance reformation, is now highly gratifying to the true philanthropist; but if the seaman is temperate while at his home "on the mountain wave," he is, to a sad extent, the reverse when he comes within the influence of the tavern and the dram-shop, where his feet take hold on death and hell. Much has been done in all our ports, but there is need of a new and vigorous effort among all the shipping, to bring every seaman to a voluntary and hearty signature of the pledge of total abstinence.

Your committee deplore it that any of our ships, especially ships sailing under the Temperance flag, should be employed to carry intoxicating liquors to unchristianized and uncivilized men; and they feel that the public indignation should be made to burn against such an act of treachery to all the best interests of the human race. It is the reproach and shame of America; and whenever the poison is exported to missionary stations—the missionaries themselves on board—there to thwart all their efforts to save man from sin and death, it has a character of peculiar blackness. Men who will do this for money, charter their ships for the heralds of salvation, and fill their holds with New England rum, should be held up to the execration of the civilized world.*

Your committee regret also to report, that the spirit ration is continued in the navy. Some noble officers and parts of crews have manfully rejected it, nailing the temperance flag to the mast; but in many of the ships, it is the ruin of some of the fairest hopes of our country.†

An able memorial on the subject has been presented to Congress from the State Temperance Convention of Maine, speaking a language which ought to be heard by the people of this great Republic.

This Convention, say they, have rejoiced that strong drinks are excluded from the naval schools, and hope much from the auspicious influences of that institution. But they cannot reconcile with the duties of Government, the unwelcome fact, that two gills of distilled spirits are every day distributed to each of the seamen in the naval service of the United States, on every sea and in every clime.

They are not unaware that fears are entertained, lest the discontinuance of the ration may impede the obtainment of recruits. But the experiment has not been tried. What influence an increase of wages may have, is unknown.

In merchant vessels, in agricultural pursuits, in manufacturing establishments and many other branches of industry, the total abstinence principle has been adopted, without encountering a diminution of laborers.

Must we, then, be told that our public vessels are the only places where moral principles cannot be cultivated and enforced?

Besides,—this objection derives its chief strength from the very usage against which we are protesting. The argument of the sailor is, that the ration has always been allowed, and therefore it is claimed for the future.

The objection also implies that the ration, with all its devastating effects, must never cease; at least, not until sailors, by having become disused to drinking, shall no longer desire ardent spirits. And by whom shall the salutary lessons of abstinence be taught to them? Not indeed by our public officers, while in the very act of administering daily the two gills. Will the Government, then, abandoning its solicitude for immediate enlistments, and conscious of its own moral incapacities, send the applicants away that they may first learn Temperance in the merchant service or elsewhere? Views so humiliating, cannot, for a moment, be indulged. Duty, honor, humanity, all indicate that the navy, this national favorite, should lead in the cause of Temperance, that its example may come down in blessings upon all other maritime employments. To this glory, unfading in its nature, we would invite the aspirings of the navy.

A recent letter to our Secretary, from the Chairman of the naval Committee, holds out the promise of some relief, but more feeling must be manifested throughout the community, before the powerful influences of interest and appetite, yet supporting this evil, can be broken and the curse removed.

From the army, reports have reached us of a very encouraging nature. Not only is all spirit-ration withheld, but the soldiers are voluntarily enrolling themselves on the principle of total abstinence from all that intoxicates. At Bedloe's Island, N. Y., the general recruiting station, from whence troops are constantly going out to all the forts, more than 400 have, since October last, signed the pledge of total abstinence.

In New England, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, the business of distillation has, for several years, been on the decline. In the State of New York the number of distilleries has been reduced from 1100 to less than 200.* And in all these States it is branded, when it is carried on for the purpose of continuing and increasing the means of drunkenness, as it should be in all civilized communities, as at war with the human race. But in the new States at the west, there has been a considerable increase, occasioned probably by the abundance and low price of grain, and, in the hope that in some part of the world to which the fiery poison is sent, it may find a market and bring back a profit to those who, for these unhallowed and murderous gains, are willing to engage in it. It is gratifying to see the men of stability and principle in those States, who are looking at the welfare of the rising generation and the firmness and perpetuity of the institutions which they are planting, raise their voice against it as a business which, while it may enrich a few, will bring a blast upon every thing which fills with transport the eye of the patriot, the philanthropist, and the Christian, as it wanders over the rich and luxurious valley of the Father of waters. Most praiseworthy was the act of a late Kalamazoo Mutual Insurance Company in their refusal to grant insurance to seven distilleries in Michigan, some of which had already commenced the unrighteous work of converting the wholesome breadstuffs, the gift of the God of nature for a benevolent purpose, into a destructive element of intemperance and crime. Your committee fully respond to the sentiment, "Never can a distillery, brewery, or grog-shop be insured, or their perpetuation in any way be encouraged by those who wish well to the health, sobriety, morals or domestic happiness of their fellow creatures. It would be infinitely better for the community and the world, were these engines of death and woe all burned to the ground; they are a lighting, withering, desolating curse to man, without one redeeming consideration; and those who in any way aid in erecting or sustaining them by furnishing labor, material, grain or money, form a triple league in the work of death, and incur a most fearful responsibility."

Splendid hotels in large cities are strong fortresses of the great destroyer. Not only is the table his throne, but he stations his emissaries at the front entrance to pounce upon his victims as they enter under the exhaustion of arduous labor and craving appetite. It is a striking characteristic of these establishments in America, that no gentleman with a company of refined ladies, can come into the main entrance, lest they fall upon the bar with its disgusting accompaniments, but must go round to another street and enter a side door; while in Europe it is all the reverse. The main entrance there has every thing inviting to the pure mind, while he who would seek the tap room and the drinking company, must go into a cellar or some back room not easily discoverable, and whose entrance is by a different passage. Thus, while other nations conceal their defects and follies, we unblushingly expose ours to the light of day; and because we do, superficial travelers at once decide, that we are far more intemperate than other nations who may exceed us in wine, beer and spirit drinking, and downright drunkenness.

The establishment of hotels from which all that intoxicates shall be removed, is becoming more and more an object of serious attention in our large cities. One in Boston, and one in Albany, and one at West Point, established, greatly to his honor, by the Secretary of War, and others in smaller places, are attracting much admiration. By their increase alone, can that pestilential influence be counteracted, which now goes forth from those bars and tables whose attractions many young men are not able to resist, and which too often make the traveler's home a den of thieves.

Your committee are not disposed to speak with undue asperity of those whose business it is to make drunkards, destroy families, and ruin souls.

In the government of a righteous God, they may not, will not, cannot prosper. The distiller, the wine manufacturer, the brewer, the grocer, may each say, 'My business is good, the appetites of men will be gratified, I am not accountable for the injury others may do to themselves, and if I am, let it come; give me riches and I will take the responsibility.' Conscience may be trampled under foot, the heart hardened, business driven, and driven well for a time; but, as years roll on, troubles may come; customers prove drunkards and fail; bad debts accumulate; children grow up without restraint; sons become vile, and, at last, through the pressure of many reverses, the manufacturer or vender himself may fall before the destroyer, and, with the multitude he has ruined, be swept away in his wickedness. Instances of such judgments have come to the knowledge of your committee, peculiarly appalling: Nor is it of rare occurrence, that, under the maddening influence of the drink they sell, and the drink they taste because they sell, they shed the blood of their companions in folly and lay down their lives on the altar of public justice. 'I was intoxicated,' said a barkeeper recently, in St. Louis, as he lay bound in the murderer's cell, waiting his execution for murder.

"I was intoxicated, but not drunk. If I had not been intoxicated, and engaged in that business, I would never have been here. Since I have been a bar-keeper, I have often had serious reflections, and was afraid I should lose my soul, I never attempted to pray, because I knew it would be making a mock of it, till I could give up selling and drinking. No man can be religious to be in that business, because he knows he is injuring his fellow men as well as himself. I knew all the time I was about it, that I was injuring my fellow men and making their families miserable. O! I have seen enough of that in my time. I have often had bad feelings when I saw men to whom I sold, going home to their families. But these feelings would soon pass away. From my personal intercourse with liquor sellers, I am satisfied they all know that their business does nobody any good, but produces only mischief and misery. But all they care about is the money they get, and they generally have so little principle if it wasn't for fear of the law, I don't see why they wouldn't steal money just as soon as make it in that way. It would not do people more hurt. Mother often wanted me to leave off my selling liquor, and follow my trade. As I am now to die, I am anxious to do all I can for those I leave behind. And I should like to warn all liquor sellers against the influence of their business, and I hope my example may be a warning to them. I would warn all young men against drinking. From what I have seen and experienced during the last nine years, I am convinced that no man can sip a little occasionally without becoming a drunkard. I have seen a great many respectable men begin in this way, and not stop till they had ruined their fortunes, and their health, and lost their lives. I have seen a great many families in comfortable circumstances, reduced to poverty and perfect wretchedness by my business, and now I deeply regret that I have in any degree contributed to it. There is no safety any where but in letting liquor alone entirely. When I lived with Esq. Bayard, I lived happy in those days. O! if I had but attended to the faithful instructions I received while in that godly family, and in Sabbath School, I might have been a respectable and useful man, and a comfort to my aged mother in her declining years."

The expressions were written down as he uttered them, and read over to him one by one, and he declared they were correct.

He mentioned a fact which shows the influence of this business, in blunting every sensibility of man's nature. Since he has been confined, not a single one of the two hundred and seventy-five rum sellers in St. Louis has ever come near him or offered to do any thing for him.

Your committee believe that, would the friends of temperance, in every place, lay such a confession on every bar and every counter, where liquor is sold, they would do much toward breaking up the retail trade. They believe also that, would they endeavor to ascertain what quantity of liquor any retailer in a course of years has sold, what proportion of his customers have become drunkards, when and how they have died, what has become of their families and patrimonial estates, what is the condition of such as are now living, what the condition of their wives and children, what burden they are to the community, what brutality, domestic cruelty or open crime, when, under the influence of liquor, they have committed, and how the use of strong drink has made them profane, Sabbath breakers, and barred them from the kingdom of God, and set all this evil before them in a spirit of kindness, and put it to their consciences, whether they can longer pursue a business so awful in all its results, that it would soon be removed from, at least, the Christian community.

The fourth Tuesday of February, the day of simultaneous meetings, was observed with a good spirit in various parts of the country. It is hoped, that it will receive more and more attention, and that both at home and in foreign countries and at all missionary stations, it will form one great concert, that our supplications and thanksgivings may ascend together, and that all beholders may be led to inquire, WHAT MEANETH THIS ?

No work of moral reform is without its discouragements. The promoter of temperance, in this world subservient to appetite and interest, will find them pressing on every side. Here, an appalling apathy and indifference in men from whom he hoped and expected warm co-operation ; there, opposition, reproach and ridicule, not easily encountered ; here a defection in some who solemnly pledged themselves to abstinence ; there, a yielding up of efforts which promised the happiest results ; here, a withholding of the moral and religious influence, even the very ministers of Christ standing forth in opposition ; and there, party-spirit and political considerations, not merely engrossing the attention of the community, but viewing the temperance cause as interfering with their own high and all-important interests. If he is disposed to look at all or even one of these, and suffer them to influence his mind, he will do nothing. But if, like the bold mariner, bent on his course, he considers them only as a few opposing winds and currents, he will soon, by skill and perseverance, be beyond their reach, guiding his bark safely into its destined haven.

"You cannot get me," said a distinguished senator in Congress, "but you will get my children." On this point, we see that which is like the light of the morning. The numerous Juvenile Temperance Societies, "the Cold Water Army," with its bright cherub faces, coming up all over our land, waving with joy and triumph the te-total banner, are a security for the temperance reformation, for at least two succeeding generations, and we hope forever. Many of the Juvenile celebrations of the 4th of July last, were of a most interesting character. In Baltimore more than 2500 children and youth, marched in procession from Monument Square to Howards' Woods, where the Declaration of Independence was read and addresses were delivered. To see so many of the rising generation enlisted under the banner of temperance, was truly an imposing spectacle.

In the past year, there has been but little direct ecclesiastical action in our cause ; not, it is to be presumed, because ecclesiastical bodies of any denomination are averse to such action, but because it would be a repetition of the past. What now is needed, is, zeal and energy among the ministers and churches which shall carry out acknowledged principles ; a thorough practical exhibition of pure temperance ; a holding up of total abstinence from all that intoxicates as forming a constituent part of consistent Christianity ; and a commendation of the cause to all men, as deserving their confidence and love.

In some minds, there is a fearful apprehension that the principles of total abstinence are not fully authorized by the Holy Scriptures, that these principles in fact, bring direct reproach upon the word of God and the Savior of men, and will result, if unchecked, in a subversion of the holy ordinance of the Lord's Supper.

Your committee believe, that very many of the friends and supporters of these principles, are surpassed by none in humble piety, and a readiness and determination to bow submissively to the word of God, and to follow the example of the divine Savior. On this subject, however, such are confident,

1. That there is no obligation resting upon them, from anything contained in the Holy Scriptures, to use intoxicating drinks as a beverage. In the most perfect abstinence from them, man may do the whole will of God, and secure his eternal salvation.

2. They believe the fruit of the vine, given of God, to be a blessing. Like bread, it has, in all ages, supported, refreshed, and gladdened the heart. It was used at the ancient passover. It was poured out before the Lord, in religious ordinances. But wine from the hand of man, wine, fermented, alcoholic, drugged, "is a mocker," so pronounced by the Holy Ghost ; is that on which man should not look when "it giveth his color in his cup, when it moveth itself aright," for, "at the last, it biteth like a serpent, it stingeth like an adder."*

3. They find God usually furnishing water, and water only to his own favored servants, to the Israelites in the wilderness, and to his servant Elijah ; actually requiring total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks in some of the most solemn and important circumstances of life, in the priests serving at the altar, and in kings and princes in the administration of justice ; and highly approving of it, as in the Rechabites, when voluntarily assumed.

4. The character of the Savior forbids the thought that he should, for the gratification and use of his own family friends, and to shew forth his glory, make a wine which should be a curse, and against which his Spirit had warned the world, instead of wine, the natural fruit of the grape, always accounted by his countrymen, a blessing.†

* Appendix H.

† Appendix I.

5. The known character of the fruit of the vine used at the Passover, as unfermented and innoxious, lays a foundation for a presumption that such may have been used at the Lord's Supper, which was instituted at that feast ; and that such, therefore, if it may be obtained, cannot fail to be acceptable, as it is safe above all others, to the end of the world.*

6. Some of the first Christians, as Timothy, were decided total abstinence men, using only water in all seasons of health ; and Paul strictly enjoined entire abstinence from wine when its use might lead others to think that the Christian differed not from the heathen.†

7. Without adverting at all to the past, the circumstances in which we are placed, the character of intoxicating drinks, adulterated and drugged, the prevalence of intemperance, and the possible rescue of poor inebriates, bid us "taste not, touch not, handle not."

From these considerations, the friends of total abstinence feel, that they have a strong argument from the Bible for abstaining from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, yea, that there is a high moral obligation resting upon them ; that the Savior is owning and blessing them in the course they pursue, while "to him who" here "knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." If they err, they look up for wisdom to direct. But not for the world would they assume the responsibility of encouraging men in the use of a drink, which has filled the earth with sadness, and may destroy those "for whom Christ died."

The influence of the Church is vast in this matter. Let the Church hold back, entrenching herself in interpretations of Scripture received and fostered in a wine drinking age, and drunkenness will continue to roll over the earth, causing thousands to descend to that gulf of despair, where they must "drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation."

Your committee hail with gladness every thing that may result in an increased purity and more vigorous action in Christian churches, and do especially rejoice in a presentation about to be made of the subject for special action to every ecclesiastical body in the land, by a highly respectable committee of the New York State Temperance Society ; and pray that it may result in one simultaneous movement which shall bring every minister and every Christian to give to it all his holy energies, and carry it triumphant, as they might, throughout the world.‡

From the commencement of the Temperance reformation, the Medical Faculty have given it all the strength of their influence ; and, through their exertions, alcohol is no longer considered. an universal panacea, an aid to nature to bear her weaknesses, useful to guard against contagion, prevent sickness, help digestion, remove pain, brace the nerves give tone to the stomach and sleep, and vigor to infancy. These mischievous delusions are passed away, and the sick chamber is no longer the place where the demon nestles and laughs and revels over his miserable victims.

To the Legislators, Magistrates, and officers of our national and State governments, we must continue to look, as we reasonably may, for help in our great cause.

The committee would not be guilty of assuming to themselves more wisdom in affairs of State than other men, especially those who have been elevated by the suffrages of their countrymen to the exalted stations of guides to these free Republics. Yet they cannot but express their surprise that, while the messages of our respected Chief Magistrates lament, from year to year, the great prevalence of pauperism and crime, and while the wisdom of our Legislatures and the money of our citizens is employed in erecting jails, penitentiaries, work-houses and asylums, so little allusion is made to the chief cause of these evils—the existence of licensed grog shops and tipping houses—and when made, so much reluctance should be manifested to its removal.

The friends of temperance feel, throughout the United States, that there is no necessity for these burdens, and that, as they do nothing to create them, they at least should be exempt from the task of supporting them.

In casting their suffrages for men who taste not the intoxicating cup, and would check and suppress the ruinous traffic, they are charged with the design of forming a political party. Such a thing would be so fraught with indiscretion, that they have not felt themselves called upon to disclaim it. But it is a right and a duty which they can never yield, and never throw off without being recreant to all the best interests of their country, to give their votes for men to be governors, legislators and judges, who, in their view, have the best qualifications. And between two candidates, other things being equal, one of whom manufactures, sells and uses intoxicating drinks, and the other, from principle, does not, there can never be a question which should have the votes of the temperance man. Said Mr. Jefferson, a statesman of no common worldly wisdom, a little before his death, "WERE I TO COMMENCE MY ADMINISTRATION AGAIN, WITH THE KNOWLEDGE WHICH, FROM EXPERIENCE, I HAVE ACQUIRED, THE FIRST QUESTION WHICH I WOULD ASK, WITH REGARD TO EVERY CANDIDATE FOR PUBLIC OFFICE, SHOULD BE, IS HE ADDICTED TO THE USE OF ARDENT SPIRIT?" And said a greater, "It is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes to drink strong drink, lest they drink and forget the law and pervert the judgment of the afflicted." And if, in addition to their superior personal qualifications, temperate rulers alone are so free from that strong bias which appetite and interest may create, as to protect the community by suitable statutes from the burdens occasioned by the sale of intoxicating liquors, the smallest degree of pure patriotism, as well as selfishness, must bid us elevate such to be our rulers.

But the friends of temperance are confident that the time is near when all must assent to our principles as the principles of true political economy. If it is a correct maxim, and we believe it is, "that the labor of men's hands is the foundation of all wealth, and that the property of the State is increased or diminished as their hands are weakened or strengthened," then the numerous drunkards in our country, are not only a burden and a moth, abstracting from the commonwealth all their own labor, but abstracting the labor of thousands on thousands more to support them, and to defray the expense which their idleness and ferocity occasion to the community. If the millions now annually wasted in the United States on intoxicating drinks could be saved and added to the common stock of the nation, increasing its agriculture, its commerce, its fisheries, its education, its domestic comforts, its internal improvements, its health, its religious blessings; and the morals of the nation were left unimpaired by this depraving power, how soon should we stand pre-eminent in all that is truly desirable and glorious among the nations of the earth! We invite our chief magistrates, legislators and patriots, to contemplate the picture, and ask what shall be done?

Your committee rejoice that there is a spirit abroad which asks not what is public sentiment, not what is expedient to secure this and that object, person or place, but what is right? what is duty to our country and to God? While public sentiment controls society, it is yet often like chance or the wind; uncontrollable, setting all calculations at defiance, and disappointing our most sanguine expectations. While it has had no mercy upon the man who, in a fit of passion, should take the life of his neighbor, or upon an individual who should put poison in a well and destroy a family, it has sustained and honored the man who has opened a fountain of poison, making many a wife widow, and child fatherless; yea, it has given him a license to do it as demanded by the public good. It would almost have sunk a ship in the ocean which should have brought the plague to our shores destroying ten individuals, and yet it has welcomed home with rejoicing, successive cargoes of wine, brandy and rum, which have sent desolation through the community. It would have put the man in a penitentiary or a mad house, who in a time of scarcity for bread, should have poured a cargo of grain into the harbor, and yet it has extolled him as a promoter of the public good who has done far worse than destroy that grain, extracted from it a poison which has brought thousands to an untimely end. It would now wage war with any nation that should press half a dozen seamen into its service, or take from us an acre of territory, or a single life, and yet it patiently bears with an enemy that presses into its service 300,000 of our citizens, strips 100,000 of their farms, their clothing and their beds, and sends 30,000 year by year, to an untimely grave. More; it courts, it patronises, it holds over it the shield of public protection; it stigmatizes the man as illiberal and sordid, an ultraist and fanatic who calls for its destruction. Its only corrector is in a consultation of minds resolved to ask, not what the public think, and the public will bear, but what is truth, what is duty? Such minds, it is believed, have been found in the State, and National Temperance Conventions. None can deny, that they have corrected great and fundamental errors in the public mind, in relation to the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors.

Your committee, as designated to call so highly responsible and important an assembly as a National Convention, would do it only in obedience to the public will. They have themselves believed that such a Convention, at no distant period, would be of eminent service to our great cause, especially in relation to the laws still existing in most of the States, which legalize and patronize the traffic in intoxicating drinks. During the year, the New York State Society, the New Jersey State Society, the Pennsylvania State Convention, and the State Society of Maryland, have each asked that such a Convention may be called, and your Committee, on consultation, have fixed upon the summer of 1841, as the most suitable season for it. And they hope that, by that period, there will be a great preparation for it, and that the call will be reciprocated from every State and county in the Union, and from foreign countries.

Your committee have dwelt long, perhaps too long upon our beloved country, the object of their strongest affections, the seat of their unremitted labors and the subject of their daily prayers. But they hasten away to other countries, whence come tidings of good, almost passing belief.

In England, there are now three Temperance Associations which claim to be national. The British and Foreign Temperance Society, of which the Bishop of London is Patron, on the old ardent spirit pledge, now, but little more than nominal. The new British and Foreign Temperance Society, which last year adopted the American pledge, and the British and Foreign Society for the suppression of intemperance, under the Earl of Stanhope, pledged to total abstinence from personal use, but nothing further.

The delegates commissioned by us to their last anniversaries, as well as our respected chairman, were most cordially welcomed, and, it is believed, their visit was greatly blessed of heaven.

The adoption of the American Pledge, by the New British and Foreign Temperance Society, was a great event for Britain and Europe. Opposed as it was by many, as that which would ruin the cause, it has given an union and energy to the friends of temperance in London, Liverpool, Birmingham, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dublin, and the smaller towns and villages of the United Kingdom. Five hundred copies of the annual Report of this now vigorous institution have been received by your committee and dispersed over the country.

This Report is highly interesting and instructive, and, while it shows much done, it brings to view a mighty work to be accomplished. In England, Scotland, and Ireland, the money annually expended in drinking is £50,000,000, and the waste fifty more, while prisons, poor houses, asylums and mad houses are filled with the victims of the great destroyer. Not less than 600,000 common drunkards reel in the streets. Intemperance is the cankerworm that eats out the strength of the army and navy, and is most destructive in the merchant service. Throughout the realm, the traffic is the great antagonist to temperance. To the traffic, the desire of gain, England owes the attractive embellishments of the gin-shop, with her clubs and balls and concerts and fairs and races. The number of beer sellers in the United Kingdom is about 45,000 and of licensed victuallers, 55,000. The number of licensed establishments for the sale of intoxicating liquors, in London, is 7000, while the number of churches is only 600.—30,000 Londoners are annually fined as drunk, and one third of these are females. £20,000 are spent every Sabbath-day at the drinking houses. In England and Wales are 100,000 commitments annually to the jails of the able bodied population of England and Wales, most of them for crimes which had their origin in intemperance.

But the hydra is held in check. In England and Scotland are about a million persons now enrolled on the total abstinence principle; 10,000 are in London; 30,000 in Glasgow; 30,000 in Liverpool; 20,000 in Manchester. Men of influence and character are standing out boldly in its defence. Replies to a circular sent to a large number of influential characters, by the Corresponding Secretary of the New British and Foreign Society, fill a large part of the last Report, and are of an instructive, convincing, and gratifying character. Eighty medical gentlemen, among the first in the kingdom, have made a declaration that no alcoholic drink, either wine, beer or spirit, is beneficial to health, can do no good even in the most moderate quantities, while larger quantities do, sooner or later, prove injurious to the human constitution.

In Scotland, as in England, the mother Temperance Society adhering to the Old Pledge ; is nearly defunct, and the Association, now efficient and powerful, is the Western Scottish Temperance Union, established on the Total Abstinence principle. In Edinburgh, from Jan. 1st to Dec. 16th last, 3,520 signatures were obtained in three te-total coffee-houses, in that city. A splendid meeting was held on the 10th of last month in honor of her Majesty's marriage.

Temperance publications, both in England and Scotland, have assumed a new character, and a noble effort is making to circulate monthly, 10,000 copies of the principal Temperance Journal among the clergy, physicians, mayors, judges and other public officers of the kingdom.

The clergy both of England and Scotland of all denominations, have rather stood aloof from our cause ; but it must soon command their attention and love, if, according to the testimony of the President of the Scottish Temperance Union, it has already brought 70,000 within the sound of the gospel, and to embrace the religion of Christ. The following declaration, of so distinguished a servant and minister of Christ, as the Rev. Wm. Jay, of Bath,

The subject of te-totalism I have examined physically, and morally, and Christianly ; and after all my reading, and reflection, and observation, and experience, I have reached a very firm and powerful conviction, that next to "the glorious gospel," God could not bless the human race so much as by the abolition of all intoxicating spirits, has been received with joy by thousands on both sides of the Atlantic, and we hope that it may lead hundreds and thousands of others who minister at the altar, to give it the same attention and cordial embrace.

From North Wales, whose clergy have been nearly all pioneers and laborers in the cause, we have most cheering accounts. Twenty ministers of all denominations, we are told, are pledged and zealous advocates of the temperance society, for every one that are advocates for the little drop and drinking system. The same as to members of the different churches. In South Wales, the cause is now advancing with great rapidity. Says the Rev. Charles Bala—"We have had the honor and privilege, of preparing the way of the Lord, now we may expect his coming with power and might."

But Ireland ! Ireland ! How shall we speak of this new and wonderful field ? In what language shall we describe a movement here—a rush of population—which, had it been for rebellion and blood, would have covered the heavens with blackness ? But it has been all for peace. The triumphs of Cork, and Limerick, and Waterford, and Dungarvon, and Clonmel, of Killarney, and Tallow, and Galway, and Loughrea, and Dublin, are triumphs of blessedness. Like the rush of the Crusaders to take Jerusalem from the infidel foe, the nation is moved in mighty masses, but she returns not to put on the more slavish chains of sensuality and death.

Your committee have endeavored to look at this mighty movement in the Emerald Isle with calmness. They have sought for information from every source, from papers of every religious denomination, and political party; they have looked at the reports of mayors, judges and police courts, respecting the cessation of drunkenness and crime; they have held correspondence with men in whom they have long placed entire confidence; they have conversed with individuals from the scene of reform, and they are satisfied that it is a GOOD WORK; the same work that we have known among ourselves; carried forward, not indeed as it has been here, but perhaps in the only way in which it could ever be effected, among that strongly marked and peculiar people.*

The first notice of this extraordinary movement was received by your committee in a letter from Richard Allen, Corresponding Secretary of the Irish Temperance Union, dated Nov. 19, 1839. In this they were informed that the Rev. Theobald Mathew, a Roman Catholic priest of Cork, was administering, in the South of Ireland, the total abstinence pledge to thousands on thousands;—that the people were pressing toward him in the cities and large towns, from 30 and 40 miles; abjuring in his presence all intoxicating drinks; and receiving his certificate and blessing. From that period to the latest dates, there has been no cessation of the great work. In Limerick, 70,000 have received the pledge, generally on the bended knee and uncovered; in Waterford, 100,000; in Castle Comer, 15,000; at Tuller, 12,000; at Gort, 50,000; at Dublin, 60,000; at Wexford, 50,000, and so on through all the larger places; making more than a million in number.

Your committee can find neither time nor space to give the description furnished of these astonishing movements.

In Limerick, the giving of pledges was commenced at the court-house on Sunday. The Rev. gentleman, after the sermon, proceeded in a covered car, attended by his friends, towards the appointed spot. We do not exaggerate when we say, that from Denmark street to the site of the court house, there were thirty thousand people moving. He was unmoved, and while his friends remarked on the stupendous demonstration, with some nervousness, he smiled at the scene, and displayed a feeling of gratulation, that he had been the vessel chosen by God for so mysteriously important a revolution. As the car neared the railings of the court, the rush was awful. A few adventurous persons clambered up the narrow and sharp spikes, to gain a view. The ballustrade near the river was covered. Many were received in the evening before Mr. Matthew retired to dinner. At the close of his brief meal, he arose and received, up to nine o'clock, some hundreds in the hall of Dr. Dunbar's house. They entered the front and made exit by the back doors. The ceremony was renewed in the morning at five, but the multitude were so unreasonable that, we regret to state, a woman lost her life. The crowd gathered insensibly, and the pressure from the rear forced in the rails of the area of Mr. Dunbar's residence. About nine o'clock he proceeded to the court-house, and continued to receive the pledges until about three o'clock, when the crowd became so dense as to infect the atmosphere of the room where he was. Mr. Dunbar went to the Mayor, and an escort of the Scots' Greys was sent down to the court, the avenues to the court were cleared, and the Rev. gentleman emancipated. The crowds were so anxious to catch a glimpse of the great apostle, that they braved the hoofs of horses and the swords of dragoons to touch the hem of his garment. The military kept all approaches free, and the most perfect regularity was observed. About TEN THOUSAND people knelt down in Mallow street, covering every superficial inch from Mr. Dunbar's to George street, while a guard of the military acting as protection, the Rev. gentleman went through them all and administered the pledge, every head uncovered. When he desired them all to stand, the simultaneous rising of so vast a number afforded one of the greatest spectacles imaginable. They departed in peace and good order to their respective homes.

Mr. Mathew then proceeded to the steam-boat quay, and received seven hundred men, who came from Kilrush, not allowing them to disembark and increase the confusion so prevalent at that hour over the city.

The words of the imposing part of the ceremonial, were—“I promise, while I belong to the Te-total Abstinence Society, to abstain from all kinds of intoxicating drink, unless used medically; and that I will dis-countenance, by advice and example, the causes of intemperance in others.” The Rev. gentlemen then adding, “God bless you, and enable you to keep the promise you have taken.”

At Waterford, notwithstanding that the rain fell in vast quantities the avenues to the city presented a dense mass of living beings wending their way to the Apostle. Several hundreds arrived from the county of Wexford in market boats, whilst the river steamers, which ply between the counties of Waterford and Wexford, were thronged far beyond their usual fare. At nine o'clock, the Rev. T. Mathew, accompanied by the bishop, Rev. Dr. Foran, Major Gahan, Sir Benjamin Morris, Mr. P. J. Murphy, and other gentlemen, left King street for Ballybricken, in the midst of whose large area a temporary hustling was erected. The ground had already been occupied by Alderman H. Alcock, mayor pro tempore, Col. Manners, and two companies of the 37th depot, with the city police under the command of Captain Wright, and the members of the Local Temperance Society, with medals displayed. The military and police formed a cordon around the hustings, and the members exerted themselves with zeal for the preservation of order. But it was unavailing; the torrent of human beings bore down every obstacle, and after much exertion, the Rev. gentleman with difficulty adjourned to the Court house. Here Mr. Mathew and his friends were comparatively comfortable, and no serious accident took place. As each batch entered the Court house hall, they knelt in humility and devotion, took the pledge at the hand of the great administrator, and, passing out by a different door from that which they went in, gave sufficient room to their followers. This plan was admirable, and tended very considerably to the convenience of the Rev. gentleman and the people. As each batch rose up after repeating the words of the pledge, brightness glowed in their countenances, such expressions as "Thank God, we are happy now,"—"Heaven bless you, Father Mathew," issued from the lips of the regenerated. We were happy to observe that many of the police knelt before the Apostle, and plighted their vow never to drink intoxicating liquors more.

To those at a distance, the details, says the Waterford Chronicle, we have endeavored to collect and embody, may appear exaggerated, and the work more of fancy than of fact; but we can only assert that we pledge ourselves to the literal accuracy of every circumstance we furnish, and that we find ourselves unable to paint the picture as it presented itself to our eyes. To see thousands and thousands of human beings, whose days had been much devoted to a fascinating, but perilous habit, coming from a far distance, amid the rain and the storm—braving the hostility of the elements, and of poverty and destitution—committing themselves to the slender chance of secular commiseration for the means of support during their absence from an humble home—doing this, not because of a worldly prospective advantage, but attracted by the fame of an unpretending priest, whose time is given up to the cause of charity and the poor—to see this, is indeed marvellous, and to account for it without acknowledging the intervention of a special Providence, is out of the question. But so it is. An intense feeling appears to have taken hold of the popular mind—a feeling widely spread and deeply rooted—planted, we verily believe, in a religious soil, and promising to bring forth the fruits of joy and happiness, social as well as physical, in good season.

St. Patrick's day, the great religious anniversary of Ireland, was devoted to the cause of temperance. In the city of Dublin, 20,000 persons paraded the streets under total abstinence banners, rejoicing in this great reform, and the blessings it would pour upon Ireland. In the evening all the churches were open for temperance lectures and sermons.

Almost without exception, because taken as a religious rite, the pledge has hitherto been kept inviolate. Drunkenness, poverty, and crime, are fleeing away. Whole classes of the community have been rendered sober, careful and provident. Shebeens and grog-shops are closed, and coffee-houses established in their stead. Distilleries are closed, and offered in the market, but no purchasers. The excise from liquor has been strikingly curtailed. A noble superstructure suddenly reared upon the broad foundation laid by a host of worthies, who for eight years have labored and toiled for the redemption of Ireland.

Your committee hail it as the salvation of Ireland. They hail it as that which may pour a tide of unlooked for good upon our own country; giving us emigrants whom our "breathing holds of iniquity," may not be able to tempt with their intoxicating vapors, and that which may touch the "Irish heart" here, and result in the complete temperance reform of that vast body of people, who, from the Emerald Isle, have made America their home. May an overruling Providence make it an instrument of good to us and to all nations.

Nothing of special interest has been received, during the year, from the continent of Europe. France, intoxicated France, consuming annually her million on million gallons of alcoholic stimulants, and, in all her wine-growing districts, where she might be rich, miserably poor, knows as yet but little of our work of reform. Her illustrious monarch, we are happy to say, is favorably inclined to its introduction and extension.

Prussia, consuming yearly 240,000,000 of quarts, but once promising much for temperance, makes no advance. Temperance Societies have been established in one province only, (the great duchy of Posen,) but not without difficulty. The Committee established in Berlin, have waited eight months for permission to institute a Society. The members feel much discouraged, but they persevere; and as they are not allowed to hold public meetings, they publish tracts and statistics, in order to prepare the ground, and dispose the public mind.

In Sweden, there are 170,000 distilleries, manufacturing 180,000,000 of quarts, (English pints,) which are sold for 97,000,000 of thalers, (13 and a half millions of pounds,) and Sweden has only 3,000,000 of inhabitants. But here, there are sustained vigorous temperance efforts. In a letter recently received by the American Tract Society, acknowledging a donation of $100, the Swedish Temperance Society say,—

We would not speak prematurely of success, for we know well that difficulties, numerous and great, lie in our way; and that in contending with these, the vigor of some of the most zealous may give way, and comparatively a small number endure to the end; yet, we cannot but 'thank God and take courage,' in reviewing the proceedings of the past year, during which, certainly more has been done to throw light upon the causes and evils of intemperance, than during any preceding year. Much has been written, printed, and circulated on the subject; many meetings have been held, conducted generally by pious and enlightened clergymen, whose zealous influence on a moral question, is, and must be great; and 150 Societies, including at least 30,000 members, have been reported to us. Our chief encouragement is found, however, in the undoubted fact, that more correct views on the subject of the use and abuse of ardent spirits now prevail among vast numbers, who are scarcely disposed to acknowledge the labors of Temperance Societies as the means of their increased light and corrected notions, still less to enrol their names among us; but we greatly rejoice, inasmuch as the Temperance cause thus progresses, even should temperance Societies not reckon any considerable increase of members.

As a system of distillation in small quantities pervades the whole country, and rests on the perverted idea prevalent in almost every farmer's arrangements, that the refuse of the still is indispensable for his dairy; and as this perhaps more than any thing else promotes and continues the use of brandy in many parts of the country, we have prepared and published a clear, popular Tract, showing the utter falsity of the above idea, and the loss sustained by not substituting other food for cattle instead of the spirit-wash, the dregs of the still: 5000 copies have been printed, and they are nearly all in circulation, not, we hope, without good effect.

In Russia, receiving 20 millions sterling from her spirit 'shops, the temperance cause is making some advance among the peasantry.

Your committee hope that all these continental kingdoms are yet to be the scenes of wonders, now witnessed in Ireland. "He that shall, will come, and will not tarry." The Lord will accomplish it in his own time.

From Canada, your committee have heard of a pleasant revival of the cause since the cessation of the internal commotions and fears of war. A letter received from the Rev. Wm. Scott, a Wesleyan Missionary, says,—

Allow me to state generally, that there never was so much excitement and inquiry on the subject of temperance in Upper Canada as at present, and thousands are joining on te-total principles in every part of the country. In Amherstburgh we have two flourishing societies, one for the village, and the other in connection with Her Majesty's 34th regiment of foot. We have good societies at Sandwich and Windsor; and we are resolved to urge on our way vigorously, trusting to the living God. We have much opposition, but this only keeps our energies, awake, and we are expecting victorious achievements. The grog-sellers are complaining; and we are resolved to drive or draw them to an honest mode of obtaining a livelihood.

Montreal is awfully subjected to intemperance;* but the temperance society there is very efficient. The tidings from Ireland have produced much emotion, and a large number of the Catholics have flocked to the temperance standard. 1353 have already taken the pledge in the Recollect Church.

In the West Indies, the small advance which was once made in temperance, has been checked and almost suppressed by the introduction of the total abstinence question, to which almost all the white population are opposed. A few individuals have raised the true standard and cry for documents shewing the true effects of the use of wine and malt liquors.

The several colonies on the coast of Africa, are now on strict temperance principles. But your committee regret to learn, that the law absolutely prohibiting the introduction of spirituous liquors into Liberia, has recently been repealed.

A notice in the public prints, that a ship is now loading at Richmond,

* Appendix O.

Virginia, with 380 hogshheads of tobacco and 600 puncheons of New England rum, fills the hearts of your committee, with deep solicitude for bleeding Africa.

In South Africa the Missionaries have been valiant soldiers for temperance. A letter from Algoa Bay, Cape Colony, dated February 22, 1829, says,

The Te-totallers have done wonders; they called the attention of government to the cause of crime, the expenses of prisoners, and responsibility of those in power, &c. The canteens were closed in most places, the chief wholesale dealers gave up the business from principle, and the adult native school was soon doubled: all this took place at Port Elizabeth, the most drunken place in the colony. At the Kat River Settlement, (Hottentots,) they refused to persons to sell any intoxicating drink; and health, comfort and piety abound there. When we came to Sedbury, black and white were drunkards; now the canteen is closed, meetings have been held since the arrival of the French and Wesleyan Missionaries, many of whom have joined us; although we have much said at our meetings that we could dispense with, still the colony loudly calls to us to exert ourselves. The sights that are in our streets are disgusting. The poor natives are carried away by disease and misery, brought on by intemperance, and Englishmen have done it!!

In Asia, the South India Temperance Union, numbering 100 members, continue the publication of their Journal, of which 9,850 copies have been printed. A recent number contains the following letter from a native Indian.

"May God give his blessing. Raamu begs with all great respect to inform the secretary of the South India Temperance Union that a number of persons with himself had formed a society in Chintadrepettah, for the purpose of endeavoring to reclaim those who, by drinking, are going to destruction. It is auxiliary to the South India Temperance Union. It was formed on the 13th day of August, 1839, and will be conducive to the benefit of many. Fifty persons have signed the pledge."

The President of the Union writes to your Committee: We find that we have much, very much to oppose us; but let us go forward, rejoicing in the belief that the same gracious God who has done so much for you in America, will do much for us here. We feel it important, to the very highest degree, that we have the means to disseminate the truth.

Communications have been received from Lodiana, near the Himalah mountains, from which we learn, that, in most of the larger military stations, temperance societies have been formed, and some of them are very flourishing. That in Merut contains 240 members, most of them te-totallers. The Journal of the American Temperance Union, and indeed all other temperance publications, are much sought after.

With China and the Sandwich Islands, pressed by stronger and more sagacious powers with poisonous drugs and intoxicating liquors, your committee can feel no other than a strong sympathy. Without pretending to any acquaintance with the secret motives of the Chinese government, they have no hesitation in saying, that the opium trade is precisely of the same character with the traffic in intoxicating liquor, and should be resisted by every people on earth; and that a Christian nation should be ashamed of its own subjects and severely chastise them when introducing it as an article of merchandise, against the solemn prohibition of another government.

In their last Report, they expressed their joy that the king and chiefs of the Sandwich Islands had barred their coast, by severe penalties, against the admission of all ardent spirits, and even wine, except on heavy duties. They regret to learn, that a French frigate has compelled them to abandon their ground; and now, fearing that, by American and European navigators, immense quantities of intoxicating liquors of the most destructive character will be introduced, to the moral depravation, if not extermination of that feeble people, your Committee have made an appeal to Louis Philippe, king of the French, and urged him, as he regards the great interests of humanity, not to enforce so destructive a treaty.* May He, in whose hands are the hearts of kings, preserve that small but interesting people, just coming up to the blessings and privileges of civilization and Christianity, from what must prove their entire ruin.

Thus have your Committee endeavored to present to view the movements of the past year in the cause of temperance, and its uncommonly interesting state throughout the world. They cannot conclude without casting an eye back from the high eminence on which they stand, to, that small band of Christian heroes and philanthropists, who, in 1826, fourteen years ago, said, COME, LET US STAND BETWEEN the LIVING and the DEAD; LET US PUT OUR HAND TO THE PLEDGE AND STAY THE PLAGUE. Sublime act! Small, despised, but mighty movement! They cannot look on those first drawn arrows;—The WELL CONDUCTED FAIRM—The INFALLIBLE ANTIDOTE—The APPEALS of Kittredge, and Nott, and Beecher, and Beman, now neglected and forgotten, laid up, like some old spears in an armory, covered with dust, without dropping a tear. The world wondered after them, and said, "IT IS FOLLY!" But God was with them. With their sling and stone, they smote the giant, that he fell.

Your Committee believe that a new pulsation has been given to the cause throughout our country and the world, and that this is the precious moment for a simultaneous movement to carry it triumphant though the earth.

To Him do they commend it, who has in his hands the hearts of all men, and who will overturn, and overturn, and overturn, until the earth is FILLED WITH HIS GLORY

APPENDIX.

A. (P. 4.)

Speech of the Rev. Dr. Humphrey, President of Amherst College, Mass. at the Anniversary of the Union, on the following resolution :

Resolved, That the American Temperance Union contemplate with gratitude to the all wise disposer of events the continued advance of the cause of temperance among the nations, especially the extraordinary movements in Ireland, which promise to deliver that beautiful Island from the most degrading bondage.

I shall confine my remarks, said he, to the latter part of the resolution, which has respect to Ireland. Although I have endeavored, for twenty-eight years, to stand in my lot, whenever called upon to advocate the cause of temperance, I was never invited to offer my thoughts on this theme upon a more heart-stirring occasion than the present; and I should esteem it one of the happiest moments of my life, if I had the ability to do it justice. O, for the power of a Curran or a Burke, for I am sure that the eloquence of the most gifted men of Ireland was never more worthily employed than it might be at the present time, in celebrating the moral revolution now in progress in that ill fated land.

What has Ireland been for six hundred years? It is one of the greenest and loveliest spots on the bosom of the ocean—the parent of great men; the mother of clear heads, and eloquent tongues, and warm and valiant hearts—the nursery of genius and wit; the home of beauty, of chivalry, and of song; but meted out, misgoverned, trodden down by the iron heel of oppression—manacled by the most abject ecclesiastical despotism, goaded on by madness and misrule to frequent insurrection—reduced to the last stages of depletion by abominable profligacy—and scorched and consumed by intoxicating liquors. From the reign of the Henry's to the youthful Victoria, Ireland has bled at every pore, exhibiting the appearance of a vast Potter's Field,—suffering by forms of despotism innumerable, and writhing under the fires of the distillery. How did our hearts sink and sicken within us, as we went from city to city, and from cabin to cabin, and, every where surrounded by squalid wretchedness, beheld the fiery deluge rolling on. We said in haste, "Ireland is lost—she is crushed under the triple oppression of the Pope, of England, and of Alcohol. The poison of alcohol is in all her veins. She has drunk till her vitals are on fire. How is it possible to live, while she consumes 23,000,000 gallons a year, at an expense of $40,000,000—while she has 40,000 spirit shops—while every fifth shop in Dublin is a dram shop; and nearly 2,500,000 of her inhabitants are without the means of subsistence!" Thus we mused and moralised,—desponding and almost limiting the Holy one of Israel. But what glad voices and shouts of emancipation are these that come to our ears, bringing over tidings from Dublin, from Galway, from Cape Fear? There is a glorious insurrection in Ireland. It began in the South, and rolling on, like an irresistible torrent, it has broken out all over the land. Even the capital is in the hands of the Revolutionists. Their forces are thousands upon thousands strong, and constantly increasing, and with badges more honorable than Napoleon, are traversing in procession and blocking up the widest streets in Dublin. Her bands, like the Philistines' new ropes and green withs, are becoming like tow. The priests and the highest dignitaries of the church are in the revolt. Even the magistrates are favoring it, and the army is infected. The daily political press, and even the organ of the Irish government, cheer on the insurrection; while the Chancellor of the Exchequer turns pale over his budget in Parliament, as he announces a great falling off of the revenue.

Was there ever such a revolution?—such a purpose, so deep, so pervading, so determined, so onward? Was there ever such an electric shock? Let the shouts of green Erin, for once, drown the voice of our own politics; for the greatest tyrant that ever lacerated her skin, laid bare her sinews, and consumed her flesh, is routed, and in a fair way to be expelled from her coasts. ALCOHOL, the personification of all evils, physical, political, and moral, there maintained dominion over mountains and valleys, rivers and lakes, with iron hand, marble heart, and pestiferous breath. But how glorious, how rapid, the progress of emancipation! In a little while more, if this outbreak is not checked, all Ireland will be free. Let us attend to the first voice that was heard no longer than last November. (Here Dr. Humphrey read several extracts from Irish papers.)

This, Mr. President, is one of those great national movements, which astonish mankind, and which cannot be accounted for, upon any of the common principles of politics, or morals. We are in the habit of speaking of our own temperance reform as one of the most remarkable, but it does not compare at all with that of injured and degraded, but now regenerated and emancipated Ireland. With all her degradation, she has done more for total abstinence in six months, than we have done for years; and how? Chiefly by the efforts of one individual. The Rev. Theobald Mathew is the honored instrument of this wonderful moral revolution. See him on the platform, on the steps of the court house, or on the broad green, with hundreds kneeling before him to receive the pledge, and thousands more waiting for an opportunity. And this is the pledge:

"I PROMISE, WHILE I BELONG TO THE TE-TOTAL ABSTINENCE SOCIETY, TO ABSTAIN FROM ALL KINDS OF INTOXICATING DRINK, UNLESS USED MEDICALLY; AND THAT I WILL DISCOURTAGE, BY ADVICE AND EXAMPLE, THE CAUSES OF INTEMPERANCE IN OTHERS."

Here, then, Mr. President, is an humble individual, with a little bit of paper, of barely four lines, which a breath of wind might blow away, changing the aspects and habits of great cities, and exerting a greater influence over the whole community than all the combined civil and moral power of the British empire. What man ever enlisted ten, fifteen, and twenty thousand recruits in a day, for any cause? What power on earth could do it? Yet Father Mathew has done it; and what is to hinder him from going on from Galway to Dublin, and from Londonderry to Cork? But let us not ascribe that glory to any instrumentality, which belongs to HIM who has the hearts of all men in his hands. It is not Father Mathew that has done it, but the Spirit of God. The Lord of Hosts is with him in this thing. I do not believe there ever has been, or ever will be, such a mighty moral impression, which does not come from God. I know, Sir, there are some who say that this popular outbreak is an enthusiasm excited by crafty men, for selfish purposes, and that it will soon spend itself, and then the waves of intemperance will return and sweep on as madly as ever. But I cannot think so. This is not wont to be the case of any moral reformation. It has not been so with our own. From the commencement its course has been onward, and it will go forward to its consummation.

Mr. President, I ought to apologise for having detained the audience so long. I now close by saying, This Ireland, with all her mental resources, and interesting character—Ireland, once delivered—Ireland sober, with a full purse and abundant resources—how long think you she will bow before any oppression?

Speech of the Hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen, on the following resolution:

Resolved, That our confidence is unimpaired in the leading measures which have been pursued for the promotion of temperance in our country, and we do urge upon all our friends an active, and untiring continuance of them; more especially would we impress upon all, the importance of a firm and consistent example of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors.

You perceive, Mr. President, said he, that this resolution regards temperance as a practical subject, and in that view, it is my purpose to consider it. I desire to plead the cause of temperance as a practical theme, that addresses itself to the heart, conscience, and intellect of every man, woman, and child—that is deep, pervading, and universal, in all its influences and interests. There has never been such a scourge permitted to visit our race, as that of intoxicating liquors. There has never been such an absurdity as that we should consent, as a christian people, and that the whole civilized world should consent to bow their necks under this bloody Moloch—and that, after all the advantages with which a merciful Providence has favored us, still fathers' hearts have bled, and mothers have wept over ruined children; this blood-stained monster has continued his ravages, unheeding alike the groans of his victims, the tears of the widow and the orphan, and the rebukes of the pulpit and the press. I said there was never a greater contradiction to human reason; but there is one greater—it is, that, after a kind Providence has opened a way of relief, by means of total abstinence, we should still have to strive and labor and debate the question, with the christian world, whether that remedy shall be adopted. All the opposition that perverted intellect can raise up has assaulted us, and is still meeting us at every corner.

Sir, I said this was a practical subject. It appears to me that the measures which the American Temperance Union employ for the promotion of this cause, are such as commend themselves to reasonable and practical men; and this resolution urges their vigorous prosecution. And what is the character of these measures? They have been called ultra and what not. Some have said, "Take care! you are going too fast." Others have pointed to the example of our blessed Savior, and with impious perversion, endeavored to shield their wine drinking habits behind that. But what are our measures? Fourteen years ago, we thought if we could reach ardent spirits, we should cure the evil; and a pledge was adopted with that view. But experience taught us that it did not reach the disease. We enlarged the remedy. We did not at first make war against mere names. Whatever it was that corrupted the taste, poisoned the body, and ruined the soul, against that we made war. Alcohol was the evil, and wherever that was found, we applied the remedy. The objector comes, and claims that wine, beer, and cider, are not distilled spirits, and should therefore escape denunciation. We answer, whatever it is that produces intoxication, whether distilled or fermented, against that we raise the warning voice. And, there was no need even of the formal change of the pledge—there was vigor enough in the original pledge, if properly understood, to cover the whole of the ground. It was intoxication that was filling up our grave yards; and against this, was the original pledge aimed. This it was that we sought to remedy; and whatever the liquor was called, if it induced this dreadful consequence, we stopped not to cavil about the name. We associated the thing with its consequences. But, we were assailed by the objector, "Remember that our Savior converted water into wine." Granted—we bow with reverence to the teachings of him who "spoke as never man spake." But, the Savior of the world, in no page of the gospel, has made it my duty to drink wine—no, not even the pure wine of Palestine, the very drink of his country, where no intoxicating drugs or filthy water have been added to it. No; wine drinking, in all its purity, was not enjoined as a christian duty. Yet, many are so under the influence of attachment to old forms, that they reason with us, and try to convince us that, when under other circumstances, in another age and country, we resolve, in the strength of his grace, to abstain from even things lawful, to accomplish a greater good,—they would convince us that we are disregarding the Savior's example. But let us try this question upon the authority of the Savior's example. Let us see whether or not that example requires us to drink wine. Look at the case of Timothy. He had considered the example of the blessed Savior; and yet what did he do? Why, Sir, so well persuaded was he of the danger of drinking wine, and so devoted to cold water, that he would not touch a drop of wine, except upon the authority of his spiritual father Paul, even for medicine; and from the very cautious manner in which Paul recommends the medicinal use of wine, it is evident that he regarded it a dangerous privilege, which he was granting. He remembered the testimony of scripture, "Wine is a mocker," and the woes denounced by the inspired penman upon those who tarry long at their wine. In all fairness, I think, if any argument is to be drawn from the scriptures, it is in favor of practising total abstinence. Look at the Old Testament. The father of the Rechabites left his dying counsel to his posterity, never to touch wine. In after years, the Lord directed the prophet to try them; and pots of wine were set before them; but they would not drink. And did the Lord frown upon them?

Did he say, "wine is one of the creatures of Providence, and therefore you ought to drink it?" No; he honored them, and gave them a place on the page of sacred history. In regard to the Old Testament, the spirit of it is on the side of total abstinence; and there can be no disagreement between the Old and the New; for they are from the same author.

But, Mr. President, we should never have resorted to this argument, but to answer this objection. The case should have been submitted clear of these questions. There is a peculiarity in the nature of the vice itself which demands it. Of all the habits, this is the most insidious. It gives no warning of its enchantments. It speaks peace, promotes joy, and makes encroachments by little and little. The individual beholds visions of exalted joy, while he digs his own grave and while the tempter whispers peace, he secretly and surely destroys all that is valuable in his character. He but professes to quench his thirst, yet only excites it. The more he seeks to gratify it, the louder is the call. It is one of those stimulating agents, which the body cannot endure without being brought into bondage. The man who takes his glass of wine to-day at a certain time, will require it in larger quantity to-morrow. More than sixty years ago, Dr. Johnson was asked, "why don't you take wine?" He answered "for the most important of all reasons, I can't take a little." That is the only place of safety. I put it to every man accustomed to use wine, if he is satisfied with the same quantity now that he was a year ago. I remember one of the most efficient friends of temperance, was led to stop drinking from reading three lines in a temperance publication, which declared that a man who was accustomed to drink would fill his glass higher every morning. He said to me, "I threw down the book and thought it extravagant, but that very day at dinner, when I went to take my brandy and water, I found I had actually doubled the quantity." Talk about drinking temperately, you cannot. God never meant alcohol should be used temperately. I tremble at every temperate friend I have, whether he drinks wine or brandy.

But the moral influence of intoxicating liquors, is still more dreadful. We can look at the staggering form of the drunkard—But O the soul! that immortal principle which God has placed within us, created with ability to trace the long track of day, to roll among the planets and calculate their distances, to swell with gratitude the universal song of praise, degraded and brought down to the very dregs of pollution. That immortal life, all valuable as it is, this prostrates and destroys. Ten or fifteen years ago, when the man commenced his career, if you had gone to him and said, "Sir, you will be a drunkard," like Hazael, he would have said with amazement, "Am I a dog that I should do this?" But now he will stagger along your streets without shame. Now and then, there may be a momentary reluctance as he passes along to the place of intoxication. He may look up and down the street, and may remember the home he has left desolate. He may almost give up the intoxicating cup, but ah! it is too late, his resolution is gone. He has nothing to fall back upon, and he rushes on and drinks down the fatal goblet, which he knows is hurrying him down to the grave.

Can we propose a simple remedy? Yes,—just leave off drinking. And ought not a redeemed world to bless God for this discovery? And ought we not heart to heart and shoulder to shoulder to press forward in the application of such a remedy?

One thought in the latter part of this resolution is worth its weight in gold.

EXAMPLE.

Let example plead for the sake of a bleeding world. One says, "I am not responsible, I am temperate, I drink moderately—If others drink to excess, I am not responsible for their conduct." That principle never had its origin in the word of God or in a generous bosom. There is not an individual who hears me, whose example is not going forth and influencing others, for good or ill. When we meet in the judgment, one of the first matters that will come up there, will be the influence which our example has exerted upon others. And, when the subject of wine comes up here, how will the precepts of the gospel lead me to dispose of it? If my example is in danger of leading others astray, I must abandon it; for "it is good neither to eat flesh, nor drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

One word to the female portion of this audience. Let female influence be consecrated to this cause. Let it tell upon a world lying in sin, and bleeding at every pore. Let it be felt in the social circle—let fashion frown upon the use of all intoxicating drinks; and I will engage they will soon come into disuse.

Speech of the Rev. E. N. Kirk, on the following resolution:

Resolved, That this meeting highly approve of the action of the Executive Committee in calling for a National Temperance Convention, and believe the time has come when there should be a Temperance Convention for the whole World.

There, said he, stands alcohol, a powerful stimulating substance, invested with various subtle forms to suit a variety of tastes; alcohol, the deadly foe, the persevering enemy of man and all his dearest interests. There stands alcohol, the first born of hell, the captain general of the forces of the prince of darkness, his aid-de-camps, habit, fashion, and the love of money. There stands the deathless soul of man, and alcohol says, that soul shall perish. We stand by and look on. We know alcohol is the enemy of every faculty of that soul. Is the understanding endowed with giant powers? Alcohol degrades it to the feebleness of idiocy. Is the conscience alive to, and ever watchful to give its needed admonitions? Alcohol stupifies, or sears it as with a hot iron. Alcohol enslaves all the noble powers of man; and even the delicate sensibilities of woman. Alcohol can turn the heart into the malice of the tiger. The immortal soul is struggling to rise—its faculties want to expand—Alcohol throws around its cursed spell, and holds it fast in degradation. Alcohol is the deadly enemy of every social interest. It dries up every rill of domestic felicity, and sends its scorching fires over every green spot. It is the deadly enemy of every political interest. The temperance reformation is going side by side with the pacific tendencies of the age.—Alcohol sets nation against nation, and would destroy the world. The resolution, I propose, approves of the call of a National Temperance Convention.

I look at America. I have looked at America first at home and again upon foreign shores. I have come home with a great many prejudices overcome. I have come home with mortified pride. I have come home with the conviction, that God has put this nation here not to be money grinders, not to fill their hearts with price—but to be the grand arena for the settlement of great principles; and when I saw the temperance reformation first started here, I saw but the carrying out of what God intended.

I found among many of the English, a feeling of national pride. I told them they ought not to feel above us, but to feel proud of America. America shows what Englishmen are and what they can be, when the shackles of the establishment are thrown off. It is a shame to America to have distilleries and beer establishments and to work them. America ought to come up and fulfil her high destiny, and show the world how to live and give glory to God. We ought to call a National Convention. Aye, we want a Convention of the WORLD. I believe the world is coming together; and every rail-road, and canal, and steam-boat is bringing it together. When I made an appointment to attend a meeting in America and on the way expressed my fears that the head winds would disappoint me, the captain said I'll land you there in time, and I found myself the very day in Troy. We want the world to come together, to consult upon what? Not upon this or that form of intoxication, but upon the intoxicating principle, and how it is to be thrown off.

I have heard this movement in Ireland called a Roman Catholic affair. My sentiments in regard to the Roman Catholic religion are well known. But I would reject from my heart the idea, that a Roman Catholic can do nothing noble. Yes, much as I love Protestantism, there is no man, I would rather take by the hand than Father Mathew. Let them go on with this glorious work. If Protestantism cannot stand but with the prop of the wine cask, I say let it go down. I want the public to thank Dr. Humphrey, that he has placed this matter before us in such a light. Now my mind is settled. It is not Father Mathew that has done it, but he who died on Calvary. It is the love of Jesus. He has said, "Poor Ireland has suffered long enough." I have travelled through Ireland and beheld her degradation, yet I believe the British Government has never done any thing to oppress her, to compare with her whisky drinking. O, wonderful sight! Sixty thousand men in one week redeemed in the city, of Dublin, from the bondage of this tyrant. In six months one million in Ireland!!!

Yes, I say, let us call for a Convention of the World. Ireland will be there, and China, will be there. I have charity enough to believe that the Emperor of China loves his people. O it is shameful that England should wage a war with China, to promote intoxication. I should expect to see some Hoang-ho there, to represent her wrongs. Yes, and the missionary from the Sandwich Islands would be there, to remonstrate against Rome, and France, and New England ships, and Boston rum.

Mr. Kirk concluded with a delicate address to the Chair, making an allusion to the results of the Brewery trials.

I remember, Sir, said he, the days, when you and I looked at this cause in its infancy. I have by letter, with others, congratulated you upon the result of the recent trial. And now again I thank you for speaking out. "Fret not thyself because of evil-doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity." "Commit thy way unto the Lord, and he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day." He has done it and blessed be his holy name.

B. (P. 40.)

So long ago as the year 1835, a charge was made in the Temperance Intelligencer, then published at Albany, against the Albany brewers, of using the most offensive, impure and disgusting water for malting grain for the purpose of making beer. To rescue their establishments from disgrace, which they said would be ruined by the slander, the brewers commenced eight suits against Mr. Delavan, then Chairman of the Executive Committee of the New York State Society, and communicator of the article, with damages laid at $300,000, holding him to bail in the sum of $40,000. From a variety of causes growing out of the law's delay, the suit was not brought to trial, until the 20th of April, 1840, when, on the first of the eight suits the defendant being allowed to prove the truth of the libel, was entirely acquitted by a jury of his country, "a righteous triumph of truth and patriotism over a combination of wealth and influence, calculated to appall any ordinary man."

As an expression of their sympathy, the following communication was transmitted to him from the city of New York.

TO EDWARD C. DELAVAN, Esq.

SIR—Permit us, your friends in the City of New York, and friends of temperance, to congratulate you on the favourable termination of the long and harassing litigation, in which the brewers of Albany have endeavoured to make you responsible for an injury done to their good name and wordly prosperity.

When you commenced the publication of certain facts in the papers of the New-York Temperance Society, such was the want of information in the community, that many of your friends had fears that you were going too far; but time has developed truths in relation to fermented as well as distilled liquors, which have astonished the public mind, and must ultimately lead to an abandonment of them as healthful and suitable beverages for man.

We cannot but feel thankful to that Providence, whose power directs all human events, for having made you so distinguished an instrument of advancing the temperance cause both in this and foreign countries, and we indulge the hope, that an impulse has been given to this blessed enterprise, which shall continue to increase through this and each succeeding generation, until its beneficial effects shall be recognized and appreciated amid the splendors of millennial glory.

In France the vine has been cultivated more than two thousand years, and the vineyards occupy nearly five million acres, producing 893,000,000 gallons of wine. The brandy distilled is estimated at 11,745,425 gallons; spirits extracted from other materials than the grape 2,250,000 gallons; cider 221,705,450 gallons; beer 74,025,550 gallons. Of wine there is consumed annually 746,571,429; of other liquors 307,226,425 gallons.

Respecting the effect of so much inebriating liquor upon France, the Rev. E. N. Kirk, who recently spent sixteen months in that country, says, "The conviction produced upon my mind by all I saw is, that no nation is more injured than France by the use of alcoholic drinks; in regard to the health, character, intellectual and moral progress of the people, and also as it respects their political and pecuniary interests. Such is my opinion. The facts are,

1. I never saw any other people who think that coffee, strong to blackness, and unrelieved by milk, is too weak, and who accordingly, fortify it with brandy.
2. I never saw the poorer classes of any other city than Paris, so regularly, and in such immense numbers, (some of them remaining from Sunday noon to Tuesday morning, I am told,) at the places of drinking. I have inquired among the most intelligent among the common people, concerning the effects, and the extent of the effects of their beverages. And it often seemed like hearing one of our temperance speeches. I fully believe that some things called characteristics of France, would disappear with the disuse of alcohol.
4. There is a great deal of ingenious drinking in France; I mean Paris. This has been so often referred to by others, I need not expand it. Many a constitution is impaired, many a bad passion inflamed, while the discreet wine bibber has learned just where to stop, and preserve self-command.
5. The habit is, I believe, very extensive, of taking their sour wines, in the morning before eating. The effect on the nervous system, is I believe very bad. I have no doubt that many a man is irritable through the whole day in consequence of it. Very many take wine at their breakfast; perhaps more use it with, than before breakfast.
6. I have never seen more drunken men in the streets of, any city, than in Paris; while my belief is that the police is the most vigilant in the world, in the prevention of such exhibitions."

Hartley Papers.

D. (P. 40.)

In the days of Addison the business of adulteration was carried on to a great extent. "There is," says he in the Tattler, "in the city, a certain fraternity of chemical operators, who work under ground, in holes, caverns, and dark retirements, to conceal their mysteries from the eye and observation of mankind. These subterranean philosophers are daily employed in the transmutation of liquors, and by the power of magical drugs and incantations, raising under the streets of London the choicest products of the hills and vallies of France. They can squeeze Bordeaux out of the sloe, and draw Champagne from an apple."

"The present state of the wine trade is such that it is almost impossible to procure genuine wine of any description." Bacchus Prize Essay.

"It is estimated that one half of the Port, and five-sixths of the White wines consumed in London, are the production of the home presses."

[Morewood on Intoxicating Liquors.]

The value of Champagne renders it a fruitful subject, in the hands of adulterators. Some of its imitations are of a most pernicious and dangerous character. Such is the common one by means of lead, which is practised to a great extent among the dealers in France, in preparing wine for exportation.

It consists of a solution of sugar of lead in water, with a little allowance of alcohol. By adding a little nitric acid, and then a portion of sulphuric acid to a tumbler full of this fluid, I have lately seen a solid deposit of sulphate of lead in the form of white flakes, filling one third of the glass, and this too in a sample that came direct from the importer. [Dr. C. A. Lee.]

Wine dealers doubtless suppose that the quantity of lead used is too small to produce any bad effects, but the numerous instances on record of poisoning by this article, prove the incorrectness of this doctrine. More than fifty cases have fallen under my observation, where persons have suffered severely from the use of cheap wines, and two or three cases of death, most probably owing to the same cause. [Id.]

Such as wish for an acquaintance with the whole subject of adulterations are referred to the two prize essays, Bacchus, and Anti-Bacchus. The evidence there given proves the general practice of adulterating intoxicating liquors to a most dangerous and alarming extent, and shows that it is done in a most deliberate manner, and totally regardless of the fatal consequences which are the inevitable result.

The following expression of public indignation was made at a large meeting at Boston, Feb. 13, on an occurrence like the one referred to in the Report.

Whereas, All experience shows that the use of intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, is destructive of the moral and physical powers, and all the best interests of the human family—and whereas, the love of money has led many persons, in several parts of this country, to export these liquors to various missionary stations—thereby counteracting the benevolent efforts making for the civilization of our less favored brethren in other lands—and whereas, it is ascertained that the Bark Emma Isadora, which sailed from this port on the 22d of last month, with a number of missionaries to Smyrna, took at the same time—as appears from the custom-house books—5213 gallons of New England rum, to poison those unfortunate natives, it becomes the dictate of humanity and religion—to Resolve, That this meeting views, with mingled feelings of pity and indignation, the shipping of the means of intoxication to any part of the world, and more so where the ignorant and uncivilized inhabitants are unacquainted with their terrible effects, in making all who use it the victims of sin, suffering and despair—and in blasting all the efforts made, at great cost of time and money, to elevate and improve the human family.

THE VICTIM OF THE NAVY.

The following article from the Illinois Herald, the Committee affix to the Report, to show what the spirit ration does for our young men who are committed to the Navy; and as a case of extraordinary reform through the power of the temperance cause.

In the month of February last, a man called at the office of the Temperance Society, with a letter in his hand, superscribed to the Secretary. His appearance was shabby in the extreme. Not an article of clothing, from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet, seemed to have been cut out for him. He was attired in fragments of cast off clothing, which were beld together and about his person, by pins and strings, instead of buttons. His feet were bandaged up with old woollen cloths, which he had picked up in the street, as a substitute for stockings. His shoes had been obtained in the same manner, and were literally without soles. These were the only protection of his feet from the snow and mud with which the ground was then covered. He appeared to be about 26 or 27 years of age. The natural expressions of intelligence and benevolence, though much blurred, were still, strikingly manifest in his countenance.

On opening the letter, we found that it was from the Secretary of the St. Clair county Temperance Society,—introducing the bearer as one who had very recently been not only reclaimed from the paths of intemperance, but hopefully converted to God; and bespeaking for him our sympathies and attentions, and efforts to procure for him employment. He was by occupation, a printer. With the utmost frankness, he gave us his personal narrative. He was brought up in the state of New York, where his connections now reside. They rank among the most respectable families in that state. A brother is a distinguished physician in one of the eastern cities. Until he was 18 or 19 years of age he was not dissipated. At that age he enlisted on board a man of war, where, in six months, on his daily governmental allowance, he acquired a confirmed habit of drinking. At the expiration of this time, he was discharged, and returned to his occupation of printing. But from that time, all that he earned during the week, was expended in Sunday spree. Soon, his habit of drinking became so confirmed and constant he could get no employment. He thenceforward became a vagrant, and wandered from the east to the west, and from north to south, seeking employment; and often condescending to perform the most menial service for money enough to feed his appetite—not indeed, with bread, but with that which had degraded and destroyed him. For seven years, they assured us, there had scarcely been a day when he had not been intoxicated more or less in proportion to the amount of liquor he could find the means of obtaining.—“O, sir,” said he, as the tears gushed from his eyes, “I have suffered every thing that human nature could endure. A thousand deaths would not be equal to it. Hundreds of times, after having spent all my money at the grocery, have I been kicked out of doors, to suffer from cold and hunger and nakedness. There is no disease growing out of drunkenness that I have not had. Again and again have I had the Mania a Potu, Delirium Tremens, and, within the last year, Asphyxy, during the paroxysms of which I have often fallen on the stones, and sometimes into the fire.” Here he pointed to the fragments of his coat, one side of which, in front, was missing.—“This,” said he, “was burned off in a fit I lately had when I fell into the fire.” To be brief, he stated that while he was recently strolling about in St. Clair county, scarcely knowing where he was, or what he was about, and expecting that the next paroxysm would deprive him of his miserable existence, and feeling the premonitory symptoms of its approach, he ventured to obtrude himself into a respectable looking house, expecting little else than to be driven out as a drunken vagabond, as he had been a hundred times before. He told the people he was going to have a fit, and begged them to take care of him during the paroxysm, and keep him from hurting himself or falling into the fire. This good family had compassion on him and ministered to his necessities. When the paroxysm was over, he was deeply affected at the treatment he had received, it was so unusual and so unexpected. They invited him to tarry a few days with them, during which time he was prevailed upon to join the temperance society, and accompany them to a Methodist Meeting. Here he humbled himself as a sinner, and was hopefully converted.

After much faithful instruction, kind admonition and prayer to God that he might be confirmed and strengthened, he was dismissed from this kind family with a letter to us as above.

We failed to procure any permanent employment for him; but a few friends furnished him with such articles of clothing as made him comfortable. He spent about a week in town, during which time, much pains were taken to imbue his mind with the importance of total abstinence, and especially of resisting, as for his life, every temptation to take the first glass.

Having determined to go to Vandalia for work, he was furnished by the Rev. Mr. Cunningham and others, with letters to friends on the way, bespeaking for him a night's lodging, or a meals' victuals. He was also furnished with a Bible, a copy of the Permanent Temperance Documents, most of which he had read while in Alton, and other temperance publications, in which were many passages marked to suit his case.

Some three or four weeks after this, we received a paper printed in a town in Indiana, on the margin of which was written "All's well. I still touch not, taste not, handle not the accursed thing, J. Y."—For several weeks in succession, we received a paper from the same office, (where it seems he had got employment) on which were written the same words. After a short interval came a long and well written letter, in which he acknowledges his gratitude to God and the friends of temperance for the kind efforts that had been made to save him, and expresses his determination to persevere. Soon after this, we received five successive Nos. of the paper, in whose office he was working, containing each, an able and interesting essay of more than a column in length "On the evils of drinking intoxicating liquor." They were written with a discrimination and pathos, which no man could command who had not deeply experienced the evils about which he was writing. The last we have heard from him was only a few weeks since, when we received a letter, post-paid, inclosing a dollar. The following is a copy of the letter, viz:

"Dear Sir,—All's well. I still touch not, taste not, handle not the accursed thing. For the inclosed dollar please send me two copies of Temperance Herald, and oblige
Yours affectionately,
J. Y.—."

G. (P. 43.)

According to the Marshal's returns there were within the United States in 1810, 14, 191 distilleries, which produced from fruit, grain and molasses 25,704,625 gallons of spirits. During the same year, 608,543 gallons were exported, leaving 15,096,049 gallons for the consumption of the year. On the average of ten years, from 1800 to 1810, inclusive, 7,512,415 gallons of foreign spirits were imported into the country; it thence appears, that 32,608,464 gallons remained within the United States for consumption in 1810, the population at that period being 7,239,903. If the increase in the production of spirits, and the importations of the article had kept pace with the increase of population, the quantity of spirits made in the country and imported, should now be doubled, or about 58,000,000 gallons. But I have no reason to conclude that the increase has been at this ratio. In 1815, the number of distilleries was but 15,000; and from official data, and the best connected views I have been enabled to take, the business of distillation gradually augmented until it attained its maximum in this country about 1829. At that time its operations were sternly held in check, by the progress of the Temperance Reformation; and the importation, manufacture, and consumption of distilled liquors, since then, have rapidly diminished. In proof of this, the business in the State of New York may serve as an illustration. From 1810 to 1825, the distilleries in this State increased from 591 to 1,129. How much greater the number became, we are not officially informed; but the Secretary of State reports in 1835, that the number has been reduced to 340, and the present year (1840) they are estimated to be less than 200. In the State of Pennsylvania in 1810, it appears, that there were 3,594 distilleries in operation; in the State of Kentucky the same year 2000; and although the population since that time has about doubled, the number of distilleries and the production of spirits, have doubtless greatly decreased. In harmony with these statements, is the diminished importation of foreign spirits. By an inspection of the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, it will be seen, that for ten years preceding 1812, the average quantity of imported spirits annually amounted to 7,712,415 gallons; but for the last ten years the average is but about 3,000,000 gallons. The returns of the inspector general of domestic spirits in the city of New York, also within a few years past, exhibit a decrease, compared with previous years, of more than 33 per cent. Of the manufacture of beer the returns in 1810 gave 5,846,144 gallons; the manufacture of this article has increased beyond that of distilled liquors.

TWO KINDS OF WINE KNOWN AMONG THE HEBREWS.

It is now unquestionably demonstrated not only that the wines of Scripture differed in regard to strength and quality from those of modern times, but that the Hebrews possessed and commonly made use of wine which differed from other wines, inasmuch as it had not been subjected to the process of fermentation. The wine which at one time is spoken of as a blessing, cannot easily be supposed to be the same, which, in another place, is represented as "a mocker," and of which it said those who indulge in it "are not wise." It has been attempted to show that the language of disapprobation referred to, has reference only to the excessive and intemperate use of the same wine. The nature of the words in question, however, renders this interpretation unsatisfactory and inconclusive.

The wine of the Scripture spoken of as a blessing, is very frequently either the newly pressed, inspissated or solidified juice of the grape. It is often mentioned as an article of food, and is associated with bread, corn, and oil. Grapes were considered so important a part of the aliment of the Hebrews, as to induce them to invent methods of preserving them for a length of time, so that they might be ready for use at any time of the year. In this condition it was eaten with honey and milk. In Isaiah, 55, 1 and 2, "The thirsty are invited to come to the waters and the hungry to buy wine and milk,"* It is certain that the ancients were in the habit of boiling down the juice of various fruits, by which means they could easily preserve their nutritious properties, and at any time, by the addition of aqueous matter, render them fit for immediate use. Columella gives us particular directions for keeping the juice of the grape fresh and equal to new without undergoing the process of fermentation. Pliny states that must was sometimes boiled down to a third part of its quantity, and at other times to one half. In the latter state it was called defrutum.

The names of two kinds of wine only, the productions of Palestine, are found in the Holy Scriptures.

1. The wine of Lebanon. This is made in the present day, exactly as it was prepared in ancient times. The juice, immediately after it is pressed, is boiled down to a greater or less consistence. In this state it could not possess alcoholic properties. It remained in fact, the healthful juice of the grape, deprived only of its watery particles.

2. The wine of Helbon, classed by Ezekiel with other nutritious articles, the produce of Judah and Israel; and these two varieties of the wines of Palestine in their unadulterated and unfermented state undoubtedly are analogous to the defrutum of the Romans and other boiled wines.

This interesting and important portion of our inquiry leads us to ascertain the denominations of the various kinds of wine mentioned in the Scripture, and the peculiar properties each of them possessed,—a subject involved in considerable difficulty, originating in the modern notion that the word rendered in our translation wine applies only to the fermented and intoxicating juice of the grape. This notion is incorrect, inasmuch as among the ancients the term was frequently applied to the juice of the grape in its unfermented state.

* The Rev. Eli Smith, missionary to Palestine, informs us, that the most valued use of the juice of the grape is for food, it being boiled down to the consistence of molasses and used as honey on bread.

Bacchus Prize Essay, chap. 18.

In the following passages allusion is made to unfermented wine either in the grape figuratively, so expressed, or in the wine press. "Thy presses shall burst out with new wine." Prov. iii. 10. "The treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses," Is. xvi. 10. "Gad and his brethren went out into the field and gathered in their grapes, and trod them and did eat and drink." Judges, ix. 27. Pharaoh drank of the juice of the grape which was pressed into the cup by the hand of the butler; a drink considered at this day peculiarly delightful in Armenia and the East. Capt. Charles Stewart, of the Madras army, who spent 14 years in Hindostan, and traveled extensively through the Eastern World, says that in India, Persia, and Palestine, and all over the East, the unfermented juice of the grape and sap of palms is an uncommon and delightful beverage. Chaptal on wines says, "The celebrated ancient wines appear in general to have rather deserved the name of Syrups. Greece produced numerous sweet wines, such as those of Chios, Lesbos, Crete, and Tharos, most of which were thick and fat from boiling them, honey and drugs were added."

Ibid.

In Greece, Rome, and Palestine, it was customary to boil down their wines into a kind of syrup. Columella, Pliny, and other Roman writers, tell us that in Italy and Greece it was common to boil their wines. These liquors must have been syrups, and every chemist knows that if they were thick syrups, they could not have undergone the process of the vinous fermentation. The practice of evaporating the juice of the grape must have been adopted in Palestine, as a wise precaution against the heat of the country, for by this operation a considerable portion of the water was boiled away, the solid and saccharine substances of the grape were brought into a thicker consistence, and the acetous fermentation prevented. This historical fact respecting the boiling of grape juice, furnishes us with proof that the wines of Palestine were not alcoholic, or did not obtain their inebriating power from vinous fermentation. Yet it is not intended to affirm that they were all destitute of an intoxicating principle. Other substances besides alcohol, possess inebriating and stupifying, or maddening properties. In the sacred volume, we have several allusions to such medicine or deleterious drugs. In Psalm lx. 3, we read of "the wine of astonishment or giddiness;" Lxxv. 8, of wine, "red and full of mixture." Is. li. 17, mentions the "cup of trembling and giddiness." In Prov. xxiii. 30, we read of those who go to "seek mixed wine." The wine mentioned Prov. xxxi. 4—7, was a soporific drink. The wine mixed with myrrh and gall, or a species of laudanum, offered to our Lord, was intended to produce stupefaction, and therefore he would not drink.

The generality of persons allow themselves to be misled by the word "wine," taking it for granted that that term has always had the same signification, and always referred to the same description of intoxicating liquor. But nothing can be more fallacious than this sort of reasoning. We have seen from the wines mentioned by Pliny and Virgil, that the drinks which bore that designation, were as different from each other as it is possible for two beverages to be, and yet all were called wines, and it is only for the reader to consult Horace, Cato, Columella, Plutarch, Atheneus, or the word of God, to perceive the delusion those labor under who imagine that the word wine always means a drink resembling modern port, sherry or champagne.

Polybius states in his 6th book that, "Among the Romans, women were forbidden to drink wine; they drank a wine which was called 'passum,' and this was made from dried grapes or raisins. As a drink, it very much resembled Ægosthinian and Cretan wine, and which is used for the purpose of allaying thirst." This passage shows that in those days intoxicating drinks were not used as a beverage for the purpose of allaying thirst. The Greeks and Romans, in those ages, had more philosophy than to drink liquid fire for the purpose of freeing themselves from thirst; they might occasionally drink stupifying draughts, but they did this for their own caprice or pleasure, not to satisfy the wants of nature. I have unfermented wine now in my possession 16 months old, made after the receipt of Columella, a receipt written about the time that our Lord lived in Judea.

It may be thought that if these wines were sweet and syrupy, they were very unfit to quench thirst, but it must be remembered that in those days it was very disreputable to drink undiluted wine, or even to take half wine and half water. Homer speaks of the Maronean wine as diluted with 20 parts water. Pliny says that in his time, when men were great tipplers, it was mixed with eight parts. "One part wine, and five parts water, was the more common and favorite mixture."

Pliny says that Falernian wine was the only wine of his day from which a flame could be kindled, "solo vinorum flamina accenditur," a striking proof that the other Roman wines were not charged with alcohol, yet they had 390 different kinds of wine. The same author mentions a Spanish wine which would not intoxicate; he adds it was a "good wine," harmless, because it would not affect the nerves, yet not deficient in flavor.

As an additional proof that the taste of the ancients very greatly differed from our modern appetite for strong drinks, we are told, on the best authority that, in former times, they adopted means to deprive their wines of all strength or spirit. "The most useful wine," says Pliny, "is that which has all its strength broken or destroyed by the filter." In 1838, port, with 24 per cent. of spirit, may be deemed the best wine, but, in the days of Pliny, who was contemporary with the Apostle Paul, "utilissimum vinum," the most useful wine, was that which was deprived of all spirit, and the toppers of that day used as many arts to render their wines weak, as tipplers of our day do to make them strong.

SUMMARY.—I have adduced arguments and authorities which most contestibly prove that the wines of the ancients were very different from ours. I have shown from the heat of the countries, the highly saccharine quality of the grapes, the boiling and evaporating of the juice, or the diluting of the must, by the addition of five times its amount of water, vinegar, &c., as in Catō's family wine, the care taken to prevent this must from fermenting, by excluding the air, and immersing them in water to lower their temperature, the frequent filtering of the juice or wine, and the placing of the vessels in fumaria and ovens; from the syrupy character of many of their wines, and the custom of diluting them with so large an amount of water; from the popularity of wines destitute of all strength; from the desire of the people to drink large quantities without being intoxicated; from the innumerable varieties of the wines, and the fact that Falernian was the only wine that would burn; from the weakness of wines produced from the natural juice of the grape, and the non-existence of pure alcohol to increase their potency; from the testimony of Aristotle, Polybius, Catō, Varro, Pliny, Columella, Horace, Plutarch, &c.; in a word, from science, philosophy, and history, I have demonstrated that a large proportion of the wines of old, were not produced by vinous fermentation, and those which were inebriating, borrowed, in a majority of cases, their intoxicating power from drugs rather than from Alcohol.

Anti Bacchus, Prize Essay, Chap. 5.

II. (P. 47.)

The miracle of converting water into wine has been eagerly advanced by the advocates of strong drink, in proof of the Savior's approval of the use of intoxicating wine. This notion has unfortunately been countenanced by those whose sacred functions ought to have been a security against such approval of practices, which imperceptibly lead to injurious results. The nature of this wine was certainly such as the Savior could safely recommend, and in the production of which he manifested his glory to his disciples. The wine which had been used at the feast, probably, was such as was in common use among the temperate portion of the community, on such occasions. The wine produced, was pronounced by the Ruler of the feast to be better than that which they had previously been drinking. On the supposition that it was intoxicating in its properties, the Son of God is represented as producing that which was more intoxicating, an inference which few Christians at the present day would be willing to draw.

Bacchus, Prize Essay.

The fact, that our Lord by a miracle produced wine at the marriage of Cana in Galilee, is urged as an invincible argument against total abstinence from alcoholic drinks. But this, like every other reason of the kind, is based upon the groundless assumption, that the term wine, always refers to the same kind of intoxicating drink; whereas, history, science, and even modern usage, show that such a conclusion is altogether false. Among the Jews, Greeks, and Romans, there were various descriptions of wines. There were the drugged, fermented, poisonous wines, injurious to the bodies, and stupifying to the minds of those who drank them; and there were also the sweet, delicious, nutrient or delightfully acid wines, which would delight and please every palate, would nourish the frame, quench thirst, refresh and cool the weary, and injure no one. Now we ask the reader to judge, which of the two the benevolent Redeemer was most likely to produce?

In looking at this text, most persons are beguiled by the terms "good wine." Our vitiated and drunken taste has corrupted our mother tongue, and with us a liquor is pronounced "good" in proportion to its strength; that is, in proportion as it is spirituous, poisonous and bad, it is called "good." But words were not so abused in the time of our Lord. Instead of strong or intoxicating wines then being esteemed "good," Pliny, and Plutarch, and Horace, intimate that "pocula vini innocentis," or innocent wine, was the best. The custom of bringing on an inferior wine as the feast proceeds, is particularly mentioned by Pliny, but the same naturalist tells us that a "good wine" was one which was destitute of spirit, and therefore shows, that by a worse wine he does not mean a weaker wine, but rather a stronger wine, or one that was disagreeable to the taste.

Those who insist that the wine made by our Lord for the marriage of Cana was an intoxicating drink, appear to be reckless of every thing except their own taste for modern wines. The narrative intimates that they have been drinking, and had drunk all that were in the house. The remarks of "the Ruler of the feast," suggest that they had well drunk, or already taken some quantity. But the term melhusko, whence have well drunk is derived, is the word which, in other places, is rendered drunk. According therefore to our opponents, the guests had well drunk, or, as the word literally signifies, were already drunk with a liquor as strong as modern port, and after they were thus intoxicated, our Lord, by a miracle, produced a large quantity of very strong wine, that they might keep on drinking after they were already drunk. This interpretation is fully involved in the idea of modern tipplers, and one would think, is sufficiently awful, to make every wine-bibber suspect that he has mistaken the character of the wine in question. On the other hand, the principles laid down in this essay, make every thing plain, and completely exonerate our Lord from encouraging the charge of drunkenness. We have shown, that, in those days, the most popular wines, were those destitute of any strength. This is the assertion of Pliny, who was contemporary with our Lord. We have also proved that the word rendered "drunk" did not at that period mean intoxicate, but only to drink freely, or to be filled with liquor; consequently a man could then be "drunk" without being intoxicated. At the marriage of Cana, the people had already been drinking an innocent wine, and when this was out, our Lord produced some more of the same description, and thus gratified the guests without endangering their health or their morals, and at the same time showed forth his own glory. The wine he made was "good" for the people in the true and proper sense of the word good. Good wine here meant an innocent, wholesome wine, and not a wine poisoned with Alcohol or rendered destructive by some pernicious drug, and therefore in reality a bad wine. Anti-Bacchus, Chap. 6.

"John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine, and ye say, he hath a devil. The Son of Man is come eating and drinking, and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber. But wisdom is justified of all her children." John was interdicted from the use of any kind of wine and strong drink, whether it consisted of must, or even of the light, weak and un-intoxicating wine most probably in use among the Hebrews. The Savior was not a Nazarite, and therefore, not being bound by the rules of that sect, was at liberty to use the common diet of the persons with whom he associated. The language of Jesus does not imply that he made use of inebriating liquor. We may, indeed, rest assured that so holy a being as the Son of God would not partake of any thing that was improper in itself, or calculated to lead his followers into self-indulgence. In this manner did the Savior come eating and drinking of the common food of the country. The charge that he was intemperate, like other of their accusations, was false and absurd. The Savior merely remarked in his own defence, "Wisdom is justified of all her children."

UNFERMENTED WINE USED IN THE PASSOVER.

For the feast the directions of Moses are, "Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days, and there shall no leavened bread be seen with thee, in all thy quarters." This command has been observed by the Jews in all ages and countries, whither they are scattered. Gesenius, an Oriental scholar of great ability, states, that the Hebrew word seor, which the English translators have rendered leaven, applies to wine as well as bread. The practice of the Jews in modern days, is in exact accordance with this opinion. "Their drink," says a Hebrew writer, whose intimate knowledge of the practises of his nation, adds value to his testimony, "during the time of the feast is either fair water, or raisin wine, and prepared by themselves, but no kind of leaven must be mixed. The vinegar of wine used by Ruth, and employed as a refreshing beverage during the labor and heat of the harvest, having undergone the process of fermentation, could not be employed at the passover, where for special reasons, every thing that contained leaven was forbidden to be present. This accounts for the circumstance, that it was among those articles which were interdicted on this solemn occasion.

It is improbable, also, that any thing would be offered as an oblation to the Almighty, which was not of the most pure and wholesome kind. "The pure blood of the grape," therefore, being a fit emblem of the divine goodness, was appropriated to this purpose. This was the wine used by Simon, the high priest, Eccles. xxxv. 15. "He stretched forth his hand to the cup, and poured out of the blood of the grape at the foot of the altar, as a sweet smelling savor unto the Most High King of all." Moses appears to refer to the wine used in idolatrous worship, as distinguished from that which was employed in sacrifice to the true God. "They sacrificed unto devils, not to God, to gods whom they knew not; where are their gods in whom they trusted, which did eat the fat of their sacrifices, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings?" He previously remarks, that "their grapes were grapes of gall, and that their clusters were bitter, while their wine was the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps." This figurative allusion had reference, no doubt, to a wine essentially different from the pure blood of the grape which had been given to them as a special blessing.

The primitive practices of the Greeks, present strong collateral evidence of the sober nature of the oblations in question. The most striking of their oblations were the offerings made to Jupiter. The Heathen, doubtless, derived their notions of this deity from Jehovah, the mighty and the true God. The sacred notions which the heathen entertained of Jupiter, prevented them from offering intoxicating wine as an oblation to that Deity. It was considered incompatible with the pure worship required on these sacred occasions. These sober sacrifices were libations of water, of milk, and of oil; wine was also forbidden to be used at the altar of Ceres and Proserpine. The Heathen abstained from offering intoxicating wine in their sacrifices to their most sacred deities, because its nature and effects were opposed to every thing that is spiritual and elevating. Is it probable that the Jews, a people possessed of superior light, and worshipers of the true God, would be less temperate in their religious observances? On the contrary, there is little doubt, that the manners of the Jews would exhibit to surrounding nations an example of sobriety and good conduct.

It was the feast of the Passover that our Lord and his disciples were in the act of celebrating, at the time of the institution of the Supper, and it is certain we have no account of any other kind of wine being then introduced, than what was usually drunk at the celebration of the Passover. How far the original customs had been preserved till the appearance of the Savior, is uncertain. It is not unlikely, however, that in this case, they had been completely so, a conclusion which appears the more likely from the expression then used by the Savior in regard to the fruit of the vine, an expression which undoubtedly refers to the natural product of the grape, and not to any artificial product, the result either of man's ingenuity or vegetable decomposition.

Bacchus, Prize Essay, Ch. 18, 19.

As for the wine drunk at the Passover, we have the best proof that it was not fermented. The word Chomitz in Hebrew, signifies "leaven," "vinegar," and every kind of fermentation. It refers alike to the panory, the vinous, and the acetous fermentation, and when it stands for an evil-doer, designated vis corruptus, or a corrupt man, stands for the putrefactive fermentation. Now the Jews at the Passover were commanded to have no leaven in their houses; and they from that day to this understood the term to refer just as much to fermented liquors as to fermented bread, and therefore at the Passover were exceedingly careful that no fermented wines should be among them. It is therefore certain that our blessed Lord did not use a fermented alcoholic liquor at the first Sacrament.

It is in allusion to the wine made from raisins, and which was much inferior to the pure juice of the grape, that our Lord says, "I will no more drink of the fruit of the vine, until I drink it new in my heavenly Father's kingdom." As though he had said, Now we drink "passum" wine, made by pouring water upon dried grapes, then we shall drink virgin wine, the blood of the grapes of Paradise, the nectar of Heaven. The spiritual import of this sentence exactly accords with the beautiful contrast suggested by a reference to those different wines. Hence those Christians who use unfermented wine at the Lord's table, have the countenance of history, and the example of the blessed Redeemer, in support of their practice, and certainly partake of drink much more resembling ancient wines, than port, sherry, or tent, or any other liquor polluted with alcohol.

Anti-Bacchus, Prize Essay, Ch. 6.

Dr. Adam Clarke severely reprobates the modern practice in some churches of making use of impure wine. "This is a most wicked and awful perversion of our Lord's ordinance. The materials made use of by Jesus Christ on this solemn occasion, were unleavened bread, and the produce of the vine, i. e. pure wine."—Clarke on the Eucharist. On the practicability of obtaining pure wine in America, and abandoning all use of that which is alcoholic, in divine ordinances, the Churches must judge. Certain it is that the false wine-breweries in America, receive great support from the Churches.

When Mr. Delavan was in Italy he obtained an introduction to one of the largest wine manufacturers, a gentleman of undoubted credit and character, who assured him that the fruit of the vine may be kept in wine countries free from fermentation with a little care, for several months, if undisturbed by transportation. Wine of this character he exhibited to him in January, several months after the vintage. He also assured him that in grape growing countries fresh wine could be made any day in the year from preserved grapes, and that the pure juice of the grape may be preserved from fermentation for any length of time by boiling, by which the principle of fermentation was destroyed. By the same gentleman, Mr. Delavan had one hundred gallons of wine made from grapes in January, which were boiled down to twenty, and brought to America; the manufacturer assured him that he could easily supply any orders from America or any other part of the world.

TEMPERANCE OF THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANS.

In addition to general principles by which Christians were to be guided in their conduct in life, there were special injunctions imperative on the members of the Christian Church.

1. It is unequivocally declared, that drunkards shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

2. That they shall be excommunicated from the society of Christians on earth.

3. "A Bishop must be vigilant, sober, not given to wine." "Sober, just, holy, temperate." A Bishop must be (mē paroinos) not given to wine. This passage has in general been understood to refer merely to the free use of wine. The original word, however, from which the translation has been made, is derived from (para) near, or by, and (oinos) wine. Literally, a Bishop must not be seen in company with wine at a wine banquet, or, in other words, partaking of wine as a common beverage, or means of sensual gratification. He must be "vigilant," (nephaleon), derived from (nē) not, and (pio) to drink, not drink. "Be sober, be vigilant," (not drink), because your adversary, the devil, goes about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. In Titus ii. 2, "that the aged man be sober, temperate." The word translated temperate is, in the Vulgate, a translation of an early age, and high authority, translated (continentem), continent, subject to no vice; and the word translated sober, is in Donnegal's Lexicon, translated "to live abstemiously," "to abstain from wine." In Gal. v. 23, the Vulgate renders the word temperance, (castitas), and in 2 Peter i. 6, the same word, "abstinence." Add to knowledge abstinence. The language of Paul to the Corinthians places this in a stronger light: "Every man that striveth for the mastery, is temperate in all things;" the Vulgate renders the word in this case, abstinēt. Paul has here reference to the Olympic games, one rule of which was abstinence from wine. Says Epictetus, the Athlētē were prohibited altogether the use of wine.

The remarks of Paul in regard to deacons and aged persons deserve further consideration. "The deacons must not be given to much wine." 1 Tim. iii. 8. "Aged women, be not given to much wine." Tit. ii. 3. The Epistle to Timothy was written in reference to Greeks. Greek and Roman youth were forbidden to indulge in the use of wine. Wine was supposed to be a cordial in old age. We must not infer that the converted Gentiles made use of intoxicating wines. On their conversion to Christianity, doubtless, they would abandon those wines which they were accustomed to use in a state of darkness, for such as were harmless. But for drinking much of these they might be reprehended for a luxurious indulgence. Bishops, by the sacred nature of their office, were to be beyond any kind of suspicion or danger, while deacons and the aged were to be exceedingly cautious.

The charge of impropriety in the Corinthian church is frequently urged in proof of the strength of the wines of the primitive Christians. "In eating every one taketh before other his own supper, and one is hungry and another is drunken." The error was the conversion of the Lord's Supper into an ordinary meal. The people assembled and brought their provisions with them. In the language of Dr. Clarke, "Some had much, others had less; some ate to excess, others had scarce enough to supply nature. One was hungry, the other was drunken, (methuei) 'filled to the full.'" This, adds, Dr. C., is the sense of the word in many places of Scripture. Unless this interpretation be allowed, the apposition of the original is destroyed, and a calumny cast on the Corinthian Church which it does not deserve.

It is difficult to determine at what time the practices of the primitive Christians began to degenerate. Minutius Felix said, in the beginning of the third century, "Our feasts are not only chaste but sober, we indulge not ourselves in banquets, nor make our feasts with wine."

The temperance of the New Testament in regard to intoxicating liquors, if not altogether proved to consist in total and habitual abstinence, approaches so near to it as to render any further discussion on the question a mere discussion of words and not of principles. The habits and practices of nominal Christians in the present day, are most unhappily opposed to the customs of the followers of Christ, at the period immediately succeeding his appearance on earth. Objections, however, are frequently urged against this view of scriptural temperance, which are founded either on some avoided or latent feeling in favor of the use of wines. The general and long continued habit of vinous indulgence renders it difficult to convince mankind either that the habits of the people differed materially in those days from our own, or that the wines in common use at that period, bore no analogy to the stimulating and highly intoxicating substitutes of the present day. When the mind yields to conviction from indubitable evidence with respect to these important and preliminary points, the most obscure and conflicting passages of scripture become comparatively easy of explanation.

Bacchus Prize Essay.

It is worthy of observation that the words nephalios and nepho, rendered in the New Testament by the terms "sober," "vigilant," and "watch," are allowed by our critics to come from the adverb (nē) not, and (pio) to drink, and of course refer to abstinence from inebriating liquors. Hesychius says, that nephalios means mē pepakotes, "not having drunk," and of the significations given to nepho by Schleusner is, "Abstineo omnis potūs inebriantis usu," "I abstain from the use of all intoxicating drinks." It is rather remarkable, that the interpretation of the lexicographer should contain the very words of the te-total pledge.

From a careful examination of the word of God, we find, that in no single instance can it be proved that it has mentioned intoxicating drinks with approbation, and consequently those who use alcoholic poisons are left without the least sanction from that unerring guide. Far from commending such drinks as inebriate, it tells us that they bite "like a serpent and sting like an adder." Total Abstinence, therefore, is in exact accordance with the letter and spirit of the WORD OF GOD.

TO THE _____ OF THE _____ CHURCH.

Rev. Sirs—Fellow Citizens,—

At the last anniversary of the New-York State Temperance Society, it was resolved,

"That a Committee be appointed to prepare and present an address to the annual or some other meeting of the several ecclesiastical bodies in this State, as well as to the larger ecclesiastical bodies in the United States; and request them severally, to take such action on the temperance cause, as may, in their judgment, appear most likely to promote the same. And, on further motion, it was resolved, That the Executive Committee of the State Society appoint a Committee of seven to carry the above resolution into effect."

In accordance with these resolutions, We have been appointed the Committee to bring the subject of Temperance to your distinct consideration. Permit us, respectfully to state our deep conviction of the importance of your co-operation to the future advancement of this great enterprise. It needs the counsels, the prayers, and the earnest efforts of the churches. It is true, that voluntary associations reach masses of mind, not yet brought under the direct influence of religious ministrations,—and thus far they have been beneficial beyond our most sanguine hopes. But the full blessing, that we are now encouraged to expect, cannot be accomplished until this sacred cause shall be urged forward by your co-operation. In our sanctuaries, we rest, under God, our best hopes for the triumphs of temperance. There rise the fountains of pure and sound principles; and thence, flow to our land, the blessings of sanctified sentiment. These influences are destined to lift up our wretched world from the pollutions of vice. Suffer us to solicit that they may be consecrated to temperance, in such particular manner as, to your wisdom, shall seem the best adapted to the nature, condition, and claims of the subject under consideration.

With respectful consideration, we are,

Your obedient servants,

THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN,
ABRAHAM KEYSER,

INTEMPERANCE IN IRELAND.

Extract from a Letter from C. Cochren, Assistant Secretary of the Irish Temperance Union, to the Secretaries of the New British and Foreign Temperance Society,—dated Dublin, April, 1839.

The causes of Irish poverty and crime are manifold, and are to be sought for in other sources besides intemperance. The physical temperament of the people, hot, mercurial, and liable to be acted upon by sudden impulses. The factions which have existed for centuries, and have carried on a ruthless, an absurd, and a bloody warfare against each other; the political and sectarian contentions, now considerably mitigated in character and outward manifestations; but still violent, blind, turbulent; the want of wise legislation; the absence of a benevolent resident landed proprietary, who, in other countries, do so much to foster habits of industry, order, and frugality among their tenantry: the dreadful perpetual contest among the peasantry to obtain land at all hazards, it being in the absence of manufactures, their only means of subsistence; their improvident marriages; the great lack of sound, moral, and religious instruction; which at present is but partially supplied; these causes, and added to these, the awful waste of SEVEN MILLIONS sterling per annum in the consumption of whiskey—will, I apprehend, be amply sufficient, satisfactorily to account for the social disorganization of Ireland. I will here introduce a few statistical statements to show the extent of Irish intemperance. At a meeting of publicans, held in Dublin a few weeks ago, it was stated by one of that body, that there were then 21,183 public-houses in Ireland, viz. in the province of Leinster, 6609; Connaught, 1989; Munster, 5979; Ulster, 6608. This summary may be relied on for its accuracy. It was given more in detail by the speaker, whose design was to exhibit the political strength of the publicans, each of them possessing the elective franchise, with a view to deter the Government from the repeal of what they are pleased to designate as an obnoxious law—a law which prohibits them from opening their houses earlier than seven o'clock in the morning, or for keeping them open later than eleven o'clock at night on week days, or than nine o'clock on Sundays. There are in every city and town in Ireland individuals who combine the grocery with the spirit trade, who are not included in the 21,183 publicans. In Dublin, the grocers are numerically greater than their rivals—for the two classes are bitterly opposed to one another in commercial matters. It may therefore be fairly calculated that the total number of licensed spirit dealers in Ireland amount to 40,000. The quantity of ardent spirits consumed annually in Ireland, exceeds, according to the revenue returns, eleven millions of gallons. In addition, there is an immense quantity of native spirit, better known as "Potthein," manufactured, none of which ever pays a farthing duty to the Excise. Again, there is a large quantity of spirits smuggled by licensed distillers and others. If I may judge by the number, extent, and vast trade of the Dublin breweries, the consumption of malt liquors in Ireland must be immense. The population of Dublin may be estimated at about 250,000.—The number of merchants and traders exceed 5000; of these, exclusive of distillers, brewers, hotel-keepers, and wine merchants, who all traffic in intoxicating liquors, eleven hundred are retail spirit dealers. The average receipts of each may, with safety, be taken at £2 per diem! and the total annual receipts of the whole will amount to upwards of £800,000! The pauper population is said, by well informed judges, to amount to 60,000, who are, without exception, addicted to intemperate habits; and are among the best customers of the grocers and publicans. How, it may be asked, can this be the case? If they are in a state of beggary, from whence do they procure the means of gratifying their liking for intoxicating liquors? To this question I reply, that the fact is so. All the money given by humane but mistaken individuals in the public streets, is invariably spent in the whiskey shop. I have been informed by a visitor of the Stranger's Friend Society, founded for the purpose of giving temporary relief to the indigent poor, and whose funds, raised by charitable subscriptions and donations, amount to about £1200 per annum—that at least half that amount, notwithstanding the care exercised by individuals of long experience, to detect and escape imposture—finds its way into the pocket of the spirit retailer. The Sick and Indigent Room-keepers' Society, an institution analogous in its character to that already mentioned, relieves annually about 30,000 individuals. But strange to say, most of the divisional distributors of its funds are persons in the grocery and spirit trade; who, it is notorious, frequently pay the money at their tea counter to the individuals, pronounced on inquiry, to be deserving objects of charity, and receive a portion of it back at the whiskey counter, which is separated from the former by a screen of tea chests erected for the purpose of concealing those who go behind them to drink. The number of individuals who, as stated by the Recorder of Dublin, who are committed for drunkenness amount to 2000 per month; and the daily reports of our police offices, evidence that intemperance is one of the chief agents and promoters of crime in the city. The few local illustrations I have given, will, I think, apply generally to the towns in Ireland.

INTRODUCTION OF TEMPERANCE SOCIETIES.

The old system was first introduced into these countries by that most amiable and truly excellent man, George W. Carr, of New Ross, who established a temperance society in that his native town; his example was speedily followed by Professor Edgar, of Belfast, and other philanthropic persons, who, for years, vigorously labored to overthrow intemperance, at least to check its progress. Their efforts were attended with but partial success. Yet they excited attention to a subject of vital interest before unthought of; collected a vast body of statistics, and ably exposed to public view the extent, causes, and consequences of drunkenness, and thus prepared a way for the diffusion and progress of total abstinence. The first individual who publicly advocated the adoption of the abstinence principle in Ireland was Mr. Finch, a Liverpool iron merchant, who was accustomed to travel periodically in this country and who having seen the good effected by that system in England, endeavored to propagate it in the various localities he visited, but only with indifferent success. He aided, however, in forming a flourishing society in Strabane, in the North of Ireland, which has since withered away almost to nothing. The next person who made an effort to promote abstinence in Ireland, was Mr. Thomas Swindlehurst, of Preston. He held a large, but most turbulent meeting in Waterford, no permanent society was formed in consequence. Mr. Robert McCurdy proved more successful than either of the other two gentlemen. He arrived in Dublin, from Halifax, in Yorkshire, formed a society there, since extinct,—proceeded from thence to the North of Ireland, where he effected a permanent lodgment in many districts; on the whole, his labors were attended with considerable advantages. The subject was now taken up by many active and intelligent persons, several of them members of the old society, and has since progressed in various places with amazing success; and the adoption of the principle has, to numerous individuals, proved beneficial to an extent never contemplated by the most sanguine minds. The societies received a wonderful stimulus from the visit of John Hockings, whose extraordinary graphic powers, singular eloquence, fund of anecdote, and overflowing humor, drew immense audiences, who were at once astonished, delighted, and instructed. Total abstinence may thus be considered as having taken deep root in Ireland. The measures now in progress for its more general diffusion will, under Providence, be productive of the happiest results.

The writer proceeds to enumerate the societies in the principal towns. Of Cork, he says: "The most recent accounts from this, the second city in Ireland, state that there are from ten to twelve thousand members. The president of the society is the very Rev. Theobald Mathew, a Roman Catholic Priest. The members take the pledge under the form of a religious obligation. William Martin, George Cox, and George Gibbs, of the Society of Friends, and the Rev. Nicholas Dunscombe, a Curate of the Established Church, are active promoters of total abstinence in Cork."

In Montreal, there are sixty-eight commercial establishments including commission houses, which sell intoxicating drinks wholesale. There are fifty-three which sell wholesale and retail, or retail by the gallon or quart. And there are two hundred and sixty-seven houses which sell by the glass: making three hundred and eighty-eight places in Montreal for the sale of the drinks which make drunkards!! besides from one to two hundred places, which display crackers, pipes, apples, &c., in their windows, many of which, we are informed, sell without license!

For the year ending 5th Jan. 1840, there were imported into Montreal, 999,043 gallons of wines and spirits. About 793 gallons of whiskey are manu-fastured yearly, most of which is sold and consumed in Montreal. In this operation, 500,000 bushels of grain are destroyed.

At the last term of the criminal court, 15 out of 32 crimes, were committed under the influence of intoxicating drinks. Out of 540 arrests in three months, 283 were for being drunk in the streets. Of 250 prisoners lying in the Montreal jail, 200 were brought there by intemperance: 77 of the whole number were females, of whom only 4 were temperate. Of 200 patients in the hospital, 95 had been subject to delirium tremens.

AN APPEAL FROM THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, TO THE KING OF THE FRENCH, IN BEHALF OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

To his Majesty Louis Philippe, King of the French.

Sir,—The undersigned, constituting the Executive officers of the American Temperance Union, an association representing and expressing the views and feelings of more than two millions of the free and enlightened citizens of the United States, beg the liberty of addressing your Majesty on a subject deeply interesting to themselves and to a portion of their fellow-beings in a far distant region of the globe.

It is too well known to your Majesty for the undersigned to enlarge upon it, that, until checked by a recent and extraordinary moral reform, the ravages of intemperance were in these States of a most distressing and alarming character;—destroying the health, industry, private peace and domestic happiness of thousands; weakening the power of motives to do right, and strengthening the power of motives to do wrong; causing an annual waste to the nation of an hundred million of dollars and forty thousand lives, and threatening the very existence of our civil and religious institutions. Over other nations, less guarded by the restraints of civilization, they were more severe. They had nearly exterminated the native savage of our forests, and were spreading wide desolation over the feeble tribes of men on the North-west coast of our continent and on the warm and beautiful islands of the Southern Pacific.

We wish to assure your Majesty that it exceedingly cheered our hearts to find that the temperance reform, which had spread a most benign influence over our own country, had reached those distant regions of the globe; that the New Zealander, the Tahitian and the Sandwich Islander, looking upon intoxicating liquor as their worst enemy, had resolved that they would not bring it to their lips; and that, as European and American navigators would introduce it to their shores and sell it to the weak and unstable, causing a fearful amount of drunkenness, murder and every evil work, some of the native governments had absolutely prohibited all importation and sale. An ordinance to that effect, your Majesty is aware was established by Tamehameha III. King of the Sandwich Islands, on the 28th of August, 1838. In that ordinance it was proclaimed, that,

“Whereas great evils have arisen at these islands in consequence of the importation of ardent spirits and the consequent use of the same, and whereas, native born citizens, whether with or without authority are no longer permitted to engage in the distillation thereof; and whereas there is abundant evidence that the best interests of the mercantile community as well as of the nation at large require the measure, therefore

“Be it enacted by the King and Chiefs of the Sandwich Islands, in council assembled, That, after the first of January 1839, the importation of rum, brandy, gin, alcohol and all distilled spirits whatsoever, shall be entirely prohibited to be landed at any port, harbor or any other place on the Sandwich Islands, and that all wines imported shall be subject to a duty of one half dollar per gallon.”

This ordinance, it is believed, had for its sole object the preservation of the people from vice, crime and utter extermination, and was designed to act with the strictest impartiality upon all foreign nations. Its promulgation gave great satisfaction to the native population, to foreign residents, to well principled Captains of ships; and awakened throughout Christendom the hope that the work of civilization would go on retarded, and that these Islanders, instead of being swept away by drunkenness, would retain an existence among the nations of the earth. An intelligent resident, connected with the foreign shipping at the Islands, expressed the hope "that all friends of order would lend their aid in favor of regulations so important in all their bearings;" and no less than ten Captains of foreign ships, then at anchor off Lahaina, addressed a letter to the government, expressing the deep interest they felt in the ordinance and their high approbation of its details. "We shall hereafter," say they, "feel increased satisfaction in coming to these Islands to recruit our ships, and shall feel a greater confidence in the stability of your government. We shall take great pleasure in lending our influence, in support of regulations so salutary to our own interests, and so important to the well being of your Islands."

Amid so much that was cheering in relation to these Islands, we have been filled with the deepest solicitude in America on learning that, on the 17th of July 1239, a treaty was imposed upon Tamehameha III. by C. Laplace, the officer commanding your Majesty's frigate L'Artemise, by which this ordinance can no longer be enforced in relation to brandies and wines imported from France. We cannot but fear that the treaty, thus imposed, will open again the flood gates of intemperance on this rescued nation, and though the ordinance may continue in force against other powers, yet, through the breach thus made, every species of intoxicating drink of the most debasing and destructive character, will be poured upon them by American and European navigators, producing the most disastrous consequences.

We can assure your Majesty that this article in the treaty has excited deep emotion in the breasts of the philanthropic in the United States; and that we cannot believe that your Majesty, if made acquainted with all the circumstances, will insist upon its enforcement. We are persuaded that the ordinance of the King and Council is of the utmost importance not only to the Islanders, but to the whole commercial world so far as they are concerned in the navigation of those seas;—that while it is required to keep those feeble people from utter extermination, its strict enforcement will greatly contribute to the thrift and enterprise of the Islanders, and their ability to carry on a valuable commerce with foreign nations. And we cannot but believe that your Majesty will feel that all nations are deeply interested in maintaining the independent and impartial character of those governments as they come into existence. We shall rejoice to see the ordinance most rigidly enforced against our own countrymen who may be disposed to violate it; and our hope is that your Majesty, on a due consideration of the subject, will with every other Christian power, consent to its continuance and even treat with severity those who wantonly disregard it.

Through our American Minister at your Majesty's Court and our personal friend, General Cass, we beg leave to present these our reflections, with the assurance of our most profound respect.

We are your Majesty's Obedient servants,

FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

OF THE

AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

THE fifth anniversary of the Union was held in the Presbyterian Church in Murray-street, on Tuesday, May 11, at 10 A. M. The officers of the Union and numerous friends of temperance assembled at the rooms in Clinton Hall, and proceeded in a body to the place of meeting, where the chair was taken by the Hon. THEODORE FRELINGHUYSEN, Chancellor of the University and one of the Vice-Presidents. The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. NORR, of Union College. After which Mr. Frelinghuysen rose and made the following remarks.

GENTLEMEN,

The principles of the American Temperance Union are not arbitrary dogmas, adopted at a venture, for the vain purpose of a doubtful experiment. They have been prompted by a considerate regard for the best interests of man—are founded on sober calculation—on just views of duty—and the most efficacious means of moral discipline and improvement.

If there was not firm ground to encourage the efforts that are now making, none would willingly encounter the opposition that assails the friends and advocates of this cause. But there is wisdom and stability in the purpose, and hope and promise beam from every aspect of the blessed scheme. Its means are adapted to the great end that is sought. A ruinous practice had grown into a habit, always stern, often irresistible in its demands. A habit that impairs health, morals, and happiness;—breaks through all the restraints of religion, honor, family, and friendship; and, in its excesses, first depraves and degrades and then destroys. These consequences are not denied. All admit them—and thousands of unhappy families mourn over them as sad and most afflicting calamities. Christians have prayed over the evil for generations—that God would arrest its progress—turn back the burning tide of desolation, and, in the greatness of His mercy, grant us deliverance. To meet the crisis and in faithfulness to His promise, the Hearer of prayer moved the purpose of total abstinence. And when it rose to our view, it drew to itself an amount of favor that inspired the strongest hopes. It is a remedy, fit, adequate, and full;—an antidote safe, effectual, and thorough. It does more than impart strength to resist the temptation—it breaks the head of the tempter.

Among the incidents attending this great moral revolution, has been the kind of opposition which it has encountered. That the vicious would denounce it, was expected;—but many of the friends of virtue have been its adversaries and assailed it as ultraism—a wisdom above that which is written, and an impeachment of scriptural example.

Perhaps the imprudence of too sanguine friends may have given some occasion for exception. But yet the remedy, that which was prayed for, the way of deliverance, stands out in its simple energy and mighty purity, clear of all challenges.

Yield to the casuist the benefit of his scruples, that the use of intoxicating liquors in itself is not sinful—but the use had become inordinate to a most alarming degree and extent. By the very laws of our physical and moral economy it was found that the use of such stimulants tended, almost inevitably, to excess. It was a monster that lived on itself—the greater the indulgence the more voracious the appetite. Every libation only aggravated the thirst which it professed to allay.

The solemn truth is, that total abstinence, seemed to be the last effort of desponding humanity, to which she clung as with the grasp of despair, in the deep, soul-felt conviction, that if this failed, all was lost.

That it calls for sacrifices, firmness and self-control, commends it to the heart and conscience. This allies it to all revolutions for good. They have always been illustrated by sacrifices. Look at our own history, from the first footstep of the pilgrim—what was that early enterprize, but a series of singular and voluntary sufferings and hardships endured for the sake of a great principle, involving the dearest interests of civil and religious liberty? And the consecrated purposes of the American Revolution,—what were they but a tribute to the doctrines asserted and defended by our forefathers, at every temporal hazard?

And now the sacred interests in danger demand like sacrifices—and the friends of temperance make them, freely, joyfully—and, thanks to the Father of mercies, successfully.

We surely have a right to the joy of success. Obstinate as the habit had become, it has been subdued in millions of instances. These emancipated hosts wonder and bless God for his merciful interposition.

The temperance movement in Ireland has been so overwhelming and universal, that it arrests us as a moral phenomenon. A mighty influence has come down from heaven in the majesty and power of truth. It has laid open to infatuated man the abominations—the pollution, crime, and madness of his bondage.

And there are still more glorious triumphs than Ireland with her reclaimed millions. It has reached the very seat and citadel of the enemy. While many of the temperate have been indifferent, incredulous, and hardly persuaded to lift a finger in aid, to rescue the victims of intoxication, the victim himself has turned upon his destroyer. He has grappled with him on his own territory; and by a resolute, heaven-helped effort, broken the chains of his thralldom—and now walks abroad with the firm, exulting footstep of a free man. Who will ever distrust again? Where is the Christian—the friend of his race—that can find it in his heart, to hinder or discourage a cause of such results and such promise?

The treasurer's report was read by JASPER CORNING, Esq. The Rev JOHN MARSH, corresponding secretary, then read the report of the Executive Committee.

Mr. TAYLOR, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the New York State Temperance Society, moved the acceptance and publication of the Report. It was, he said, by exhibiting such facts as the Report contained, that this great moral enterprise was to be brought home to the bosom of every individual in the community.

Dr. CHARLES JEWETT, of Massachusetts seconded the resolution.

Mr. President, said he, I rejoice at the cheering prospect presented in the report just read, but there is much to do. We have stormed and successfully carried the outworks of the enemy, but the strong hold yet remains in his hands. Fifteen years ago, when I first began to labor in behalf of temperance in a country school house in Massachusetts, there was no man for ten miles around, whom I could call brother in the cause. Since then there has been a great change, and we are still going ahead, but there is a great deal to do. We have never put forth a degree of energy at all proportionate to the magnitude of the work. A great obstacle to our progress is the want of system. To use a figure that will be intelligible to farmers, we should put ahead a great breaking up plough, to tear up the turf, clear away the roots and stones, and get ready for the crop. On this plough we should put the strong team. But it seems to me that we save the principal part of our strength for the harrow and the bush which come after, and leave the great plough to be dragged by a feeble team.

In Massachusetts, we raise $41,000 for christianizing the heathen. This is not too much—nor so much as we can afford. But to save the thousands who are annually going down to the drunkard's grave, we raise only $2000.

We have not told half the truth respecting the evils of intemperance and its causes. We have said the truth was too bad, and the people would not bear it. I am for telling the truth, and the whole truth. The adversaries of temperance accuse us of a persecuting spirit. Sir, we have none. The dealers in ardent spirits have been treated with a degree of lenity, such as has been extended to no other class. We have condemned the deed, but let the men alone.

In Rhode Island, a child was burnt to death in consequence of its mother getting drunk. The rum-seller cared little for that. He pocketed the avails. He was a justice of the peace. But the fact became known—the boys found it out, and they cried, "There goes the man who sold the woman the rum." He shrunk before the indignation of the community. He could not brave the storm of contempt which the exposure brought upon him. It does not give us joy to report such facts. Let them give us better facts, and we'll report them. But let us publish the names of the sellers in cases like this and we shall stop the traffic.

Suppose a drunkard dies in the street, and the rum-seller reads it in the papers. Such an event is so common, that it excites no wonder. It is merely an awful affair, and nothing is accomplished by its publication.

But let the name of the dealer be published, and, as we say in the country, he must pull up stakes and be off. Another man is dead over across the street—his bloated face, his blood-shot eyes, his tattered garments, and feeble limbs, betray the ravages of the monster, and show the cause of his death. But unless the name of the man who slew him by furnishing the poison, is mentioned, the publication does no good.

We don't take hold of the matter right. It is a thing that we don't understand. The best illustration I can give—my illustrations are somewhat homely, for which you must pardon me—is that of a landsman taking up a lobster. He knows there is a safe place to handle him, but he don't know where to find it. He feels round, and finally gets a nip. An old Salt comes along, and, knowing how to take the lobster, picks him up without damage, claps a couple of plugs in his claws, and renders him harmless. Just so with the grog-shops. They bothered us. We didn't know how to take them up. But the Baltimore reformed drunkards have taught us a lesson. They have come up out of the den of the lobster—they have seized him in safety, and, if I mistake not, they will soon stick a peg in his claws, and prevent him ever biting hereafter.

In looking at the prospect of final success in this cause, Dr. J. alluded to the Sabbath schools and the District schools, which he regarded as channels for the exercise of a very powerful influence in behalf of this cause. The church, also, is another means of exciting a very powerful influence. Nine-tenths of the females are with us; and they have more to do than any other class in forming the character of the rising generation. Here there is the Irish reformation, reflecting back its light upon us, and here come the efforts and labors of our Baltimore friends.

Finally, God is with us. There is not a single attribute of his character by which He can by any possibility take sides with our opponents. It is as contrary to his justice as his mercy. Dr. J. trusted we should always feel our dependence on him for assistance, and go to him for strength.

PROFESSOR GOODRICH, of New Haven, offered a resolution declaring that the smiles of Heaven upon the temperance reformation in foreign lands, call for the liveliest expressions of gratitude from the friends of the cause.

If there was anything, he said, which might justly awaken grateful emotions in the mind of an American citizen, on setting his foot for the first time on the continent of Europe, it was the conviction that an influence had gone forth from this young nation that has shaken all Europe, and is yet to pour light and power into its darkness and death.

If any thing is to rejoice our hearts it is, that truth has been communicated to us, to be borne forth to the nations of the earth—that light has risen in this western world, which is to scatter the darkness of the nations, and usher in the millennial glory. When we hear from abroad of the temperance movements the past year, we have reason devoutly to thank God.

The President then introduced Rev. Mr. SCOTT, of Stockholm, in Sweden, who said he had no intention of making a speech, but only of stating a few facts connected with the progress of this great cause in foreign lands. He should like to take this meeting on a journey through Europe, and follow our excellent agent and his friend, Mr. Baird, to tell us what has been done in Prussia, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, and Russia. But this would take more time than was allotted to him at this meeting, and therefore he would confine his remarks to Sweden, where he had resided nearly eleven years. That a reform was needed, will readily be granted, said he, when I tell you that ten years ago there were upwards of 160 thousand stills at work. This great number may surprise you; but a great many of them are exceedingly small, containing not more than five or six gallons each; and the evil arises not so much from the amount produced, as the extent to which it is diffused over the whole country. Such a still is found, as a right, connected with every piece of ground; and that right contemplates the manufacture of so much as may be necessary for the cultivator of the ground and his family. Hence, himself and all his family share in the works of manufacture, and acquire a taste for the liquor.

The quantity produced is not easily ascertained; but, with a population of three millions, there is not less perhaps than forty millions of gallons. There does not seem to be a great amount of gross drunkenness; but they are all at it. One custom is that of having a brandy table in one corner of the room, where every one goes to whet his appetite before taking his food. This state of things was deeply lamented by many; but up to 1830, nothing was done. Then, following the example set by this country, it was resolved to try what could be done; and a temperance society was formed. Opinion was divided as to the principle on which the effort should be made. A majority thought it would not do at once to strike at the root, but that the society must be formed on the plan of using it moderately. Great and influential men joined the society, but it soon died out. But, a few of the minority thought nothing but a pledge of total abstinence would do. That pledge does not include wine and other fermented liquors; for such drinks are not known there. This society labored on for five or six years, laughed at, and its labors despised; about the beginning of 1836, the cause languished. The men connected with it did not look up to God; and it must be allowed the cause had fallen back.

It was then you sent us Mr. Baird the first time, and from that day we may date an entire new era. Mr. Baird presented his book to his Majesty, and the King caused it to be translated; and, at his own expense, placed a copy in every parish, commanding every clergyman to read it, and make efforts to enlighten the people on the subject.

When I read the book, I felt amazed, when I considered who they were that were engaged in the production and consumption of spirits. I was confident no private individual or association would have dared to publish such a book. But, the Chief of the Government issued forth his order, and the book is hence called the King's book, and no man dares to offer a word against it. From that time, there was a most delightful state of revived operations; and almost everywhere, the people refer to the 'King's book,' or 'Baird's book,' as it is sometimes called, on the occasion. It is not to be wondered at, then, that the repeated visit of our friend should have been hailed with enthusiasm. Never, perhaps, in the history of the world, has a conqueror passed through a country with such marks of honor as your friend. It was not as a conqueror, causing tears of blood to flow; but his course was marked with gentleness, peace, and love; and the tears shed were those of hearty gratitude: and it is especially gratifying that the poorer classes were most ready to testify their thankfulness.

We have with us men of great influence and talents, and the cause is making delightful progress. We have examples of very old men, who have used spirits constantly for many years, laying it aside at once without injury, and with benefit. One instance just occurred, a few days before we left. A respectable old gentleman, 95 years of age, a tall, stout, athletic man, had always been in the habit of using it daily. He had often been spoken to on the subject and had always said, "I am a living proof that what you say is not true." But at length this strong man began to come down—he became ill, and took his bed. He was visited by one doctor and another to no purpose; and they concluded there was no hope for him. He asked them if he should leave off his drink; but they said, "By no means, but rather increase it, because your strength is declining." He was no better; and at length, a liquid matter began to run from his swelled legs. One morning his attendant, while dressing his limbs, started back and exclaimed, "I smell brandy!" The old man was astonished. But the attendant said he was not quite sure, and he would call in his assistant; and, on further examination, they told him it was quite strong—clear brandy. "What is this?" said the old man; "I had heard a great deal said about brandy not mixing with the fluids; but I had no idea that I had been drinking brandy these many years to run out through my legs. I'll drink no more." He laid it aside, and in three days he was up, and soon gained his strength. He took a journey of 25 miles, to visit a relative who was president of a temperance society, told him that as he had before set up himself as a living witness against the temperance principle, he was now a living witness in its favor, and joined the society.

I have referred to the visits of Mr. Baird. Those visits must be repeated. This friend of temperance and religion has acquired an influence by the direct interposition of Divine Providence, which I venture to say no other man living possesses. Here are some pious men, who feel their hearts encouraged, and their hands held up by such visits. They stand almost alone. You must send these visits to encourage them on, lest they should sink under the weight.

He thought, where there was such an opening for doing good on a large scale, there ought not to be lacking the necessary funds. The Swedish Temperance Society had adopted the principle of requiring every member to pay a dollar a year, or $12 at once; and perhaps we might be stimulated by their example, and thus our influence upon them be reflected back upon ourselves.

Wherever this cause prospers, there are morality and religion. We look upon the field, for the purpose of sowing the good seed ; but it is a stagnant marsh, and if we put in the seed, it is in danger of rotting. This society digs a trench along the field, it drains off the fearful, desolating element, and then the seed sown produces its legitimate fruit.

The Secretary said he was happy to state that the Rev. Mr. Baird was in the house, and hoped we should be permitted once more to hear his voice.

Mr. BAIRD rose, under the influence of considerable emotion, and said, he should not have consented to say one word, if it were not that he had a duty to discharge, which he probably should have no other opportunity of doing. He would therefore with pleasure improve the present season by expressing to the friends of Temperance in the United States, the interest which the peasantry of Sweden feel, and the thanks which they have commanded me to express to them for the benefit which they have received, through their influence, from the temperance cause.

The progress of Temperance in Europe is only in its infancy. Things cannot make progress so rapidly there as here. Mr. B. made some interesting statements respecting Russia—from which it appears that the consumption of ardent spirits is so enormous, connected with the government revenue, as to be attacked with great difficulty. However, the Emperor has countenanced the publication of the Temperance History, and hopes are entertained that this course will ultimately triumph there.

He had conversed with seven kings, and most of the ministers of state. They were interested in the subject, and especially in the legislation which had taken place in this country, and which he hoped might have a good effect, if carried out, as it ought to be, upon the European governments.

The Chairman introduced Rev. Mr. Bingham, of the Sandwich Island Mission, who made a statement of the progress of Temperance there, and the obstacles thrown in its way by the visit of the French frigate.

Mr. BINGHAM gave an account of the early efforts for suppressing intemperance at the Sandwich Islands. The distilleries were all suppressed except those belonging to the king. He was petitioned to suspend them also, and to prevent the importation and sale of spirits from abroad. This was opposed by the foreign residents. They desired one or two grog shops, well regulated grog shops ! ! The influence over the king was successful. He passed a law prohibiting the manufacture or importation of ardent spirits. A fine of $1,000 was imposed on any ship that should import it. The effect was most salutary. This they thought was a triumph. They think so still. But, alas ! a foreign and a powerful government, against argument and against remonstrance, enforced upon them, at the cannon's mouth, the introduction of French wine and brandy.

The consequences following this outrage of the French government have been disastrous to the sobriety and morals of the Sandwich Islands. The fires of intemperance which had been extinguished, are again enkindled in part. If France may introduce her brandy, America claims the right to furnish her whisky, and England her West India Rum ! But there is still much of hope. The principles of Temperance have been promulgated and established among a large part of the population. Mr. Bingham alluded to the effect of example from British and American Men-of-War, visiting the Islands, on board of which daily rations of spirits are furnished the crew in the presence of the inhabitants of the Islands, as very destructive. He said the people of the Islands see the spirit rations given out on board these ships. They say the President of the United States is a wise and good man, and how is it that he furnishes spirituous liquor.

After Mr. Bingham had sat down, Mr. JOHN TAPPAN, of Boston, offered the following resolution :—

Resolved, That the poor unfortunate drunkard has claims to our deepest sympathy, and that the sudden reformation and deliverance from their chains of bondage of some thousands of this class in our land, shows that the Lord is very pitiful and of great mercy, and is a token that he designs the entire deliverance of our land from the evils of intemperance.

The resolution, he said, contemplates the pitiful condition of the drunkard, and we need not be told how pitiful that is, nor whom it concerns. We are accustomed to think of them as ragged, miserable men; but he had lived long enough to know that it concerns every individual; and he feared there was not one within the sound of his voice but had lost some friend by it. To his knowledge, three of the first families in the land had each a son and brother in the Insane Hospital, from this cause. They demand our deepest sympathies. There is a class of them who demand it in a very high degree—those who are just bursting the shackles of their degradation. Their families have suffered in silence in the depths of poverty. They hear of these meetings, want to attend the meetings, but have not the garments. In Boston, last week, a woman called on him and said she wanted to open her house to receive cast-off clothing, and make it up for them, and she thought there ought to be one in every ward. He urged very strongly the necessity of giving them a little pecuniary aid now, to encourage them in this effort at the present time.

Mr. JOHN HAWKINS of Baltimore, a reformed inebriate, then took the stand, and spoke with much feeling and solemnity of the practicability and possibility of the reformation and salvation of every drunkard; of himself as a brand plucked from the burning, and of his earnest desire to save every one who was such, from the degradation and misery to which he had been reduced.

The meeting was closed with singing the doxology, and with a deep sympathy for the thousands deceived and ruined by intoxicating liquors.

REPORT

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

NEVER before have the Committee come up to the Anniversary of the Temperance Union, with such cause for gratitude and praise. The mighty Ruler of the Universe, who will overturn and overturn and overturn, until every knee shall bow, seems to have taken the enterprise in which we are engaged into his own hands, and to have given it an impulse in the past year, wholly unlooked for by its warmest advocates. We are nothing. Human thought stretched not to what has been accomplished. Human action would have been stamped as folly, had it labored to do it. God devised, and God has executed. We look up and adore.

Three special interpositions of divine providence, during the past year for the cause of temperance, demand the earliest notice.

The first, in the continued and wonderful change, which had commenced at our last anniversary, in the people of Ireland, and in its recent extension over the Irish in our own land. From many peculiarities, they seemed to be inaccessible to our ordinary instrumentalities. Faith staggered as she heard of the tumultuous waves of the people rushing onward, and of thousands on thousands, uncovered but by the canopy of heaven, taking the pledge. But it is now no longer matter of doubt. Ireland is sober. Near five millions of her population have abandoned the use of all intoxicating drinks. Her prisons are nearly empty. Her cities are quiet. Her distilleries are converted into manufactories and oat mills. Her fairs are without a drunkard. Her families are being clothed. Her children will soon have bread enough and to spare.

Hope cast a bright look at the son of Erin in America. She saw him in bondage. She knew that he loved his chain, for it was the badge of friendship. But she remembered the sympathies of the Irish heart, and she has not been disappointed. During the past winter, through the length and breadth of the land, in most of our cities, on our rail roads and canals, wherever, in a word, the poor emigrant has found a resting place, there a pledge has been taken by hundreds and thousands, rescuing them at once from the dram-shop and the social glass, saving from waste their hard earnings, and, from an early sacrifice, their health and lives. That this work, either in Ireland or America, has been all that it should be, or all that it is said to be, or unaccompanied with improper influences, or that it will be there or here lasting, the committee pretend not to say. But enough has been done to fill the heart of every philanthropist and patriot with joy. And in it all, we are nothing. Father Mathew is nothing. God has done it, and to him be the praise.*

The second interposition of divine providence during the year, had relation to the successful tour of our countryman, the Rev. Robert Baird, in the north of Europe. None but He who has the hearts of kings in his hand, could have secured such a reception as this beloved brother met from the king of Sweden, his nobles, his clergy, his diet, and more especially permission from the emperor of the Russias to print and circulate the history of † the Temperance Reformation to any extent, among his sixty millions of subjects.

The third interposition of divine providence has been in a movement among a peculiar portion of our own population—the debasedly drunken—effecting, to a wonderful extent, their own reformation.

In the commencement of the Temperance reform, there was but little expectation of saving the poor unfortunate drunkard. It was generally supposed that his case was hopeless; and the great object was to save sober men, and especially the rising generation, from drunkenness, by inducing them to abstain from all its causes. Yet the powerful onset made upon intemperance, arrested the attention of multitudes of this class, and kindled up the hopes of their friends; and in 1835, the Secretary of the American Temperance Society reported, as the effect of the work, the reformation of 12,000 drunkards. But there was no associated action among themselves for countenance and support; their reform was based on the ardent spirit pledge, they continued in the use of cider and other fermented drinks, and went back by scores to destruction; yet many were permanently saved, and became consistent members of Christian churches. In England, this bold and active class early attracted the regard, and received the sympathies of the temperance public. As they reformed, they at once became the principal public speakers. Their speeches were reported and were read in this country with great interest. They formed a considerable part of the ninth report of the American Temperance Society. And as these reformed men were based from the first on the total abstinence pledge, there have been but few relapses; the work has gone on, and it is now estimated that 35,000 drunkards have been reclaimed of whom 5,600 have united with Christian churches. In Ireland, by another and peculiar influence they have been reformed almost without number; and a gentleman who has recently traveled through the most reformed districts, has informed the committee that, best of all, they keep the pledge.

* Appendix A.

But alas! in our own country, the mother of the temperance reformation, the poor drunkard has, of late, been almost forgotten. In none of the reports of the Union or of the State societies for the last three years, has there been one bright spot for him. 500,000 in number, the main support of the taverns and dramshops licensed for the public good, they have been left to sink unlamented into the drunkard's grave. But God has been better to them than others. What do our eyes witness? In the city of Baltimore, without any special agency excepting their action one upon another, more than a thousand reformed drunkards stand upon their feet and walk forth erect in the conscious dignity of freemen. Several of these individuals, long deceived, robbed, beaten, tormented, suffering the horrors of the pit, now plucked from the burning, joyful in their deliverance, affected to tears at what they have been and where they have been, yet willing to acknowledge all and confess all, and desirous of raising every inebriate from degradation and ruin, have visited sister cities, and by telling to crowded houses their simple tale, have waked up this great community to the practicability and possibility of the drunkard's reform, and arrested many a miserable man who was abandoned by his friends to hopeless ruin. Already in New York, more than 400, and in Boston more than 550, have signed the pledge of total abstinence. Similar simultaneous and wholly unconnected movements have been reported to the committee from Buffalo, Augusta, Me., and other places. And in the Irish movement, several hundreds of drunkards in our large cities and in other places, though not recognized as such with much publicity, have become sober men. It is not perhaps too much to say, that in the United States, in the last six months, 15,000 drunkards have ceased using all intoxicating drinks. The physiologist has been confounded, the caviller silenced, the fearful shamed, the distiller and the vender struck dumb, and a tide of unlooked for blessings has been poured into the bosoms of many miserable families. The committee believe it is a token that God intends to complete our enterprise and save our land from the curse of intemperance. They look anxiously for the advance of the work. Thousands of families, still afflicted with drunken inmates, are looking anxiously for it. And hosts of men, who see nothing before them but certain destruction, are waiting around this new pool of Bethesda, now that the waters are troubled, that they may be healed. The committee commend this movement to the active co-operation, and the prayers of every friend of humanity. They commend it to the solemn consideration of every manufacturer and vender of intoxicating drinks, and ask them whether they can longer carry on a business which has bound these thousands in the most degrading wretchedness, and which, if prospered as many desire, would again drag them back from the liberty with which God has made them free. They commend it to our legislators, who, for the public good, are licensing men to do that which has been the ruin of all these men, and which, if continued, will be the ruin of thousands on thousands in all coming generations. They plead with men of every class for poor unfortunate drunkards: believing that now, by suitable efforts, they may be saved by hundreds and thousands from temporal and eternal ruin.*

Besides these extraordinary interpositions of divine providence for the advance of the cause of temperance, the committee acknowledge with gratitude the blessing of God, during the year, upon all their ordinary labors, and the labors of the various State and local societies throughout the country.

Through the divine goodness, death has not been suffered to invade their number or to make any breach upon the officers of the American Temperance Union. But the committee state with regret the retirement of E. C. Delavan Esq., from the station to which the National Temperance Convention at Saratoga Springs called him as Chairman of the committee, and which office he filled for five years with great credit to himself and usefulness to his country and race.*

The committee have labored for a faithful discharge of the duties incumbent on them. They have endeavored to make themselves fully acquainted with the state of the temperance cause at home and abroad; with the action and power of the great destroyer; with every obstacle to the temperance reformation; with the laws of nature and revelation relating to the use of alcoholic drinks; with the views of wise and good men in this and other lands on the subject of temperance; and, as they have gained light, have labored to form and sustain a correct public sentiment, and to animate and press forward every part of the host arrayed against the deadly evil. Besides maintaining an extensive correspondence, the committee were able to put into circulation in the year ending the 31st December last, 105,000 Journals, 200,000 Juvenile Temperance Advocates, 3000 copies of their last report, 24,000 tracts, handbills and almanacs, 26,000 extras of the New York Observer and Evangelist with extracts from Anti-Bacchus, and 75,000 of the Beer trials. This and the support of the office and agencies was at an expense of $10,347 39, absorbing nearly all their income from sales and donations and what remained to them of the $10,000 donation of Mr. Delavan. That generous gift, made four years since to the Union, has now all been expended, to the satisfaction, it is believed, of the generous donor, and the committee must now look to other friends for support. With the sum of $3000, besides the income from their publications, they can go on, and exert perhaps a more salutary influence over the country and the world than can possibly be exerted by so small a sum in any other way. Confident that it would be provided, they have associated with them a highly respectable committee of publication from various denominations of Christians, and only wait for the means to publish a temperance library, tracts and handbills, which shall be like the leaves of the tree which are "for the healing of the nations."

The committee believe that the Union is gaining more and more the confidence of the American public. The simplicity of its design, and its capabilities of extending its influence over the whole country without engaging in more than it can perform, impress every beholder. They find the press saying, without any solicitation on their part—

"The Union is just the kind of national organization that is needed. Composed of a fair representation from the several states, it concentrates the combined wisdom of the country, and at the same time leaves the state organizations to carry forward the work within their own limits in their own way. This is as it should be. There is no one of our national institutions which is more justly entitled to a generous support, or which promises greater results in proportion to the means employed."*

The duties of Corresponding Secretary and Editor are too numerous for one individual to perform. An assistant Secretary is greatly needed, of commanding influence, who shall visit the Legislatures and ecclesiastical bodies of the States, attend the anniversaries of the State societies, keep up their action, and solicit from individuals donations for the general purposes of the Union. Such an officer, it is believed, would be of eminent service.

From several of the States the committee have received most cheering reports of temperance action ; particularly from Maine, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Illinois, and Missouri. In Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Ohio, Kentucky, and Michigan, there have been wholesome and valuable movements, but in some of the States the friends of the cause have sunk into a surprising and fatal apathy. Even an abstract of each report received is more than the committee can give.† They can only collect and present some of the main facts, and remark upon some general principles and actions.

TEMPERANCE ORGANIZATIONS AND PLEDGES.

The number of active and efficient temperance societies and pledged members in each of the states, auxiliary to the State societies, it is impossible to estimate. Almost the only pledge that is now in circulation is a pledge of total abstinence from the manufacture, sale and use of all intoxicating drinks, as a beverage. If there are societies in which it is not adopted, it is not so much from want of conviction of its propriety as from apathy and indifference to the great object to be effected, there being now none so uninformed and weak as to suppose that, in character, there is any difference in drinks that intoxicate. The committee are happy to state that the pledge which, at one time seemed to be abandoned as having accomplished its work, has again been restored, and is now extensively circulated in temperance meetings for general signature. In the city of New York more than 16,000 pledges have been taken during the year. In Philadelphia more than 4000 during the lectures of Mr Hunt, in four months. By the missionaries of the Am. Home Miss. Society, 65,000 have been taken in the new settlements. In like manner the action has been good in other parts of the country.

* Appendix E.

OF THE PRESS AND TEMPERANCE LECTURERS.

In Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, New York, Delaware, Maryland, South Carolina, Georgia, Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Illinois and Missouri valuable temperance papers have been sustained, while almost every religious paper and several political journals have inserted in their columns an unusual amount of temperance intelligence. And it is a subject of congratulation that all the temperance journals perfectly harmonize with each other and with the publications of the Union. No difference of views exists on a single point. All are a well disciplined corps, wasting no strength upon indifferent subjects, or in the destruction of rival institutions, but bringing their whole force upon the too long triumphant foe.

In several of the states public lecturers have been employed through most of the year by the state organizations, and in several of our large cities the clergy have volunteered in a series of temperance sermons on successive Sabbath evenings, which have been well received and have been influential in causing the churches to understand and feel the close connection between the progress of religion and the progress of temperance, and their great responsibilities in relation to this moral enterprise.

A smaller number than usual of original works on the subject of temperance, have appeared from the American press; but two valuable works, Bacchus and Anti-Bacchus, have been reprinted from the English, which, if not perfectly unexceptionable in all their positions and criticisms, are valuable repositories of science and fact, of powerful reasoning and graphic illustration, and are accomplishing an important change in the public sentiment relating to the Divine sanction and approbation of the use of intoxicating drinks.

LEGISLATIVE ACTION.

Since the repeal of the fifteen gallon law of Massachusetts, and the high political excitement in relation to it, there has been in none of the States much attempt at legislative action. Political men in power have been unwilling to risk it, and hence temperance men have been less forward to ask it. In the Legislature of New York a committee have reported in favor of referring the question of license to an expression of the popular voice in each of the towns and wards of the cities, but no action has been had upon the report. In Rhode Island the Legislature have raised the price of license to 50 dollars, and forbidden the sale of liquor in taverns on the Sabbath. In Pennsylvania an act has been passed requiring the applicants for license to publish their petition and the names of those who recommend them, six weeks in the county papers, thus rendering it more difficult than before to procure a license. The laws of Tennessee and Mississippi remain as they were, and the people are satisfied with them. Their influence is salutary for temperance.

From the success of the enemy in bringing evil upon us in our attempts at legislation, there has been in the minds of the community an increased prejudice against it. Had there never been any legislation at all, the subject would stand differently from what it now does. But legislation has been had. Laws relating to the traffic in spirituous liquors, stand on the statute book of every state in the Union, and are extensively found to be in the way of the temperance reform. They license, sanction, and make legally right the traffic; and, as free citizens of the states, the friends of temperance ask, and they have a right to ask, yea it is their duty to ask that such a support of the traffic be abandoned. The object of legislation is to protect the rights of the people; to guard them against heavy burdens and remove grievous evils. Every penitentiary, every alms house, every mad house shews that the free and promiscuous traffic is the greatest curse to the country. An immense number of individuals throughout the land, not less than 500,000, with their families and dependants are reduced by it to the lowest degradation and suffering, and the friends of temperance have no right to hold their peace until the cause of these evils is removed. On this subject the committee entirely accord with the following sentiments of the Hon. Theodore Lyman, late mayor of the city of Boston.

If there can be no doubt of this degradation of the man who would otherwise have been respectable, and prosperous, and perhaps eminent, but instead of being thus, is degraded, then it becomes us to look about us and see what has been the cause of it. Why is it? who has done it? the person who administers, or society which permits it? Society is interested to look into it, and to remove the cause. It is a duty both to God and man.

I have alluded to the case of the unhappy, unfortunate man. What now is the condition of the wife and mother? How many wives of such men are obliged to toil hard and late for the support of a family—to suffer reproach, rebuke, self denial, and domestic weariness and want! And how many children are left to grow up in poverty and suffering—how many become burdens to society, or thieves to prey upon community! Accountability rests somewhere. Somebody must answer for all this; and so long as there is responsibility, society must try the experiment of a removal, and not faint until it is accomplished.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

During the year there has been, in several of the States, an increasing disposition for a popular vote on the license question. The experiments in Illinois have been found to be favorable. In Connecticut also the reference of the subject to the people has elicited in town meetings, much important discussion and an amount of statistical information to which most of the inhabitants were strangers, and which has been not a little appalling. "They were," say several reports, "the best temperance meetings we ever had. Many came to them who never attended the regular temperance meetings in their lives, and became converts to the cause." Several towns in that State, by a large vote, have withheld all licenses. In Lowell, Mass., the question was submitted in March, to the whole people, "Shall the Mayor and Aldermen be instructed to grant no licenses for the sale of intoxicating drinks during the ensuing municipal year?" The vote was 830 yea, and 365 nay. More recently, memorials, numerous signed by highly respectable citizens of Boston have been presented to the Mayor and Aldermen of that city, asking for a popular vote on the same question. In Cincinnati more than 3000 men, in the practical business walks of life, men who labor hard to procure the means of supporting their families and who cannot well bear any unnecessary burdens of taxation, have petitioned the City Councils to abolish all licenses to sell intoxicating drinks, and thus forever close the manufactories of criminals and paupers: and though repulsed, they are not hushed, but will come up again like the importunate widow; yea, will stand up as freemen, and demand it as a right that they be delivered from these public burdens. It is confidently believed, that in very many parts of our country a large majority are now submitting to a minority on the subject; and that, could it be fairly discussed before the people and a free vote be taken, separate, as it cannot be in legislative bodies, from political considerations, a decision would be extensively gained against the legal sanction of any house for the sale of intoxicating drinks. Such a business must sooner or later be acknowledged by public sentiment and every statute book to be piracy on the best interests of man. God will hasten it by one of those unexpected and mighty movements for which this age is so signal.

ECCLESIASTICAL ACTION.

The Committee have been gratified during the past, as in former years, with many spirited resolves of ecclesiastical bodies in favor of temperance.* These strengthen and animate them in their course. These they place in their archives, as witnesses to posterity that their course was approved by those who, in this age, held up the ark. They are gratified to find the number of churches increasing which will admit no man to the communion table who manufactures, sells, and uses intoxicating drinks as a beverage; and that there is a growing disposition to avoid, in the ordinances of God's house, all those vile compounds which are sold in the shops as wine, and to procure, as far as possible, the fruit of the vine, free from those inflaming and maddening properties which drown men in destruction and perdition.† But they are grieved to hear of numerous rum-sellers yet nestling quietly in the churches, and astonished that ministers are to be found who consider the subject of temperance unfit for the pulpit, and who look upon the whole temperance effort as unnecessary and even an intrusion upon the work of the Gospel. Let them close their pulpits; let them cry, The Temple of the Lord! The Church! The Church! Let the distiller and the vender sit unrebuked under their ministry; the work will roll on; drunkards will be reformed; the benevolent heart of the Redeemer will be gratified; and if he spares them from the thunder-bolt of his wrath, and does not send leanness into their souls, and "spew" them out of his mouth, it will be because this is the day of his patience and forbearance, and not of righteous retribution.

* Appendix G.

† Appendix H.

PATRONAGE IN HIGH PLACES.

By the rulers of the land, by the Governors of States, by national and state Legislators patronage is not yet fully bestowed where we believe every consideration of affection to their beloved country would direct. Men highly talented, greatly beloved, and showing in quiet domestic life every virtue, seem not to be able to withstand the powerful influence of evil custom abroad, and when most honored by public elevation, often most dishonor themselves; leading at the same time the youth of the country in the paths of ruin. The army of the nation is reaping in every department the benefit of the removal of the spirit ration.* But the Navy, the Committee and it is believed thousands of patriots say with grief, is still the patron of Intemperance. In many of our ships of war there has been a most commendable relinquishment by officers and parts of crews of the spirit ration, but, as a whole, more spirit is consumed in the American navy than in any of its size on the globe. Foreign nations who hear of the temperance of our country, are confounded at it. The poor Islander of the sea, struggling to burst from his degrading bondage to strong drink, looks at it with amazement, and says, "The President of the United States knows what is good, can I be mistaken? Shame to America, if she does not blot this foul stain from her escutcheon!"

EVIL PARTICIPATION.

The Committee cannot withhold an expression of their amazement, not to say indignation, at the extent to which the friends of temperance patronize rum-selling taverns and stores. A temperance house is often sustained with difficulty even in a temperance community; the friends of the cause showing it to be a matter of indifference whether they go there or to one that has a bar; and stores which are little else than dram shops receive, in a multitude of cases, equal patronage with those which are conducted on strict temperance principles. These things ought not so to be. This traffic is the greatest scourge of the human family, and the venders know it. They could carry on no other business doing half the mischief in society that this does. Public indignation would render it impossible. But the absence of public indignation and the patronage and friendship of men who say they see the extent of the evil, keeps them quiet. Their consciences condemn them. The love of money draws them onward. 'I know,' said a merchant in St. Louis, 'you have all the truth and all the argument on your side, but I must make money.' But would temperance families everywhere withdraw themselves from them, never be seen, if possible, where there is a tavern bar; never trade with a man who will scatter this desolating poison through society, it is confidently believed that a great change would speedily take place throughout the community. The friends of temperance would injure no man in his business. But they have a right to protect themselves and the community from injury. Yea, it is their duty to do it, and to show their decided disapprobation of all evil by their practice, as well as to feel it in their hearts.

Drunkenness cannot be continued in our world without the aid of sober men. Sober men must make the laws which license the traffic. Sober men must be the venders; sober men must be the importers and distillers, and sober men must furnish the capital for importation and the materials for distillation. The farmers of our country stand at the fountain head of this tremendous evil, and to them, standing there, the committee would make a solemn appeal.

FARMERS, next to the great Author of all good, you stand as the almoners of the world. You bring food out of the earth. As you pour it forth from your granaries, the eye blesses you. "The ox knoweth his owner; the ass his master's crib;" the widow's heart, as she receives sustenance for herself and her babes, sings for joy. For a momentary gain, you can become a curse and not a blessing. You can convert the grain and the fruit, which the earth pours into your lap, into a poison which shall turn the husband and father into a brute and fiend, beggar families, excite men to the commission of ferocious crime and ruin souls. But will you do it? You can feed the distilleries with your surplus productions; you can keep up those fires which burn up the body and burn the soul, and plead that, as you throw your productions into the public market, you are not responsible for any of these effects. But will this satisfy conscience? Will this satisfy the suffering community? Will this satisfy the Searcher of all hearts, when he shall make inquisition for blood? To those of you, who look simply at loss and gain, we would put a question—Will not every drunkard you make, hold a mortgage on your farm for his support? Will not every criminal, excited by you to acts of violence, lay upon you for his trial, imprisonment and punishment a heavy assessment? Does not every poor house, jail and hospital bring sweat from the brow of every industrious farmer and mechanic in the land? And have you a right for personal gain thus heavily to tax your fellow citizens? May there not also be an assessment of another character which you may not be willing to bear? If you manufacture a poison or furnish the material for this manufacture may not a righteous God visit you in judgment by calling you to follow a son to a drunkard's grave, or perhaps cause you to fall into a pit which you yourselves have digged? Would it not be better that God should send the mildew to blast your crops, the insect to destroy your wheat, the frost to blight your corn, the caterpillar to waste your fruit; better, far better that God should stretch you on a bed of sickness, and that your farm should lay waste, your fruit rot in the field, and your children become pensioners on the bounty of others?*

SIMULTANEOUS MEETINGS.

The annual gathering of the friends of temperance, for mutual consultation, thanksgiving and prayer, on the fourth Tuesday of February, was greater and more animating this year than for several past seasons. It is hoped it will soon be a general concert, on which Heaven will smile;—reaching from sea to sea, “from the river to the ends of the earth.”

RESULTS AND PROSPECTS.

The Committee believe that the temperance cause has a constantly increasing claim upon the attention, gratitude and support of all classes of our fellow citizens, and that its prospects of ultimate success are daily growing brighter and brighter.

* Appendix K.

Foreigners ask for statistics to show the benefits of temperance. Our testimonials are negative rather than positive. The statistics of Intemperance are abroad in the land.* Every one sees them in the poor house, the jail, the hospital, the open street. But no one sees the 100,000 men who now would have been drunkards, but for this good cause; no one notices the strong and the vigorous who would have been years ago tenants of the grave; no one can point out the happy families who would have been cursed with a drunken father, or with a son bringing a parent's grey hairs with sorrow to the grave;—no one can tell the increased labor, wealth, power, and moral virtue of the nation, or the greater purity and holiness of the churches. Temperance is willing that her work should be concealed and her name unknown, if the day may but come when the horrid statistics of intemperance can be reported no more.

Still the marks of progress and the blessedness of results are so full and cheering, that they cannot be hid. And where there is no direct evidence of advance, your Committee are confident it is not because there is no sincere desire for it, but because no efficient influence is brought to bear upon the evil. In such places there may often be found a large church, a learned ministry, men standing high in political life, wealth enough to sustain any moral enterprise, and a general disposition to educate the rising generation for usefulness and happiness in the world, and yet nothing is done to suppress or prevent intemperance. None but a few individuals, reputed as irregular and unsafe guides, have there signed the total abstinence pledge; few feel any personal obligation resting upon them to sign it; few look upon the traffic as derogatory to moral or Christian character, and the temperance enterprise is suffered to hold none other than a low place among the benevolent enterprises of the day. Here the demon triumphs. Here, here are the sighs of the drunkard's wife and the tears of his famished babes. Here is Sabbath breaking and swearing; and here blood toucheth blood. The distiller and the vender roll in wealth, but the poor house and jail are full of degraded and lost beings. And on whom rests the fearful responsibility?

* Appendix L.

In relation to the great fountains of intemperance the Committee are aware of the vast amount of capital invested, and the power of appetite which demands indulgence; but they see also a daily diminution. By the returns of the census of 1840 we learn, there are, in the United States, 9,657 distilleries, producing 36,343,236 gallons of ardent spirit. But 16 years ago, it was estimated there were 40,000 distilleries, producing 72 million gallons. In Pennsylvania, where there are now but 707, there were 5000. In New York, where are but 219, were 1,200. Then we had 12 millions of people, each of whom could be furnished with 6 gallons a-year; now 17 millions, to each of whom the distiller can give but two. Several distilleries have been abandoned as unprofitable; others, through the power of conscience, which will not suffer man knowingly to consume his fellow man. And conscience is still doing its work. Says the last report of the Illinois State Society,

We know of one which is said to have been a perfect machinery of its kind, and yielded the proprietor, as he informed us, a very large net profit a day. He suddenly became convinced that his distillery was scattering death and destruction through the land! In reflecting on it during a sleepless night, he came to the conclusion that he must stop it or lose his soul. Before the day dawned he took his resolution. "I will be faithful to my conscience and my God whatever becomes of my distillery." Accordingly he arose early in the morning, went to the distillery, and calling his foreman, "John," said he, "come here. Put out these fires." John looked up, at this unusual order, in doubt whether he understood it. "What do you mean Mr. S—?" "I mean to have you put out the fires of the distillery. There shall no more whisky be made here." A little while after, Mr. S. visited the mill, and discovered that John was grinding grain for a neighboring distillery. "I will have no more of this, John; stop it! stop it!" said he. "Indeed, I believe you will have me do nothing after a while, Mr. S., said the man.—"No, NOTHING towards making whisky." Application was made to him, either to hire or buy his establishment, to carry on the business.—"No" said Mr. S., "I will rent or sell it for a church or any useful purpose, but not for a distillery."

In 1825, there were in operation in the State of New York 29 breweries. Ten years after the number was 99. The official returns do not show the quantity of beer made. In 1840, the number was decreased to 86, with the yearly manufacture of 6,471,122 gallons. For the last four years there has been a constant decrease in the demand for this destructive article. Never, perhaps, have facts which nearly concerned human health and the lawful pleasures of appetite been sought after with more avidity, than those connected with the prosecution of Mr. Delavan by the brewers of Albany. A circulation of 75,000 copies of the report of the trial, besides the issues from the newspaper press, have not yet satisfied the community. Should a fair exposé of the drug system follow, the manufacture of beer would probably soon come to its proper termination.*

The cider-mill has vanished from the premises of almost every reputable New England farmer, and the choicest wines are, by thousands and tens of thousands who once delighted in them, now classed with the "drink of the drunkard." The traffic is immense, but it is not where it once was. Hundreds and thousands who once sold intoxicating liquors without the least emotion, would now sooner cut off a hand than be a partaker in these murderous gains. Many of our finest steamers at the east and the west have closed their bars. The temperance tavern is rising up fair and beautiful with its fountains of pure cold water in city and country, and meeting with a good support.* The Marlboro' House in Boston, the Tremont in New York, the Worcester, the Albany, the Hartford Hotels, which are disgraced with nothing which intoxicate, are delightful visiting places to the weary traveler. The West is purifying herself from the evil under which the East has so long groaned. Says the Illinois report: "A man may now travel from St. Louis to Chicago through the heart of the State, and without inconvenience to himself, not be compelled to put up at a rum-selling house on the road. A clergyman in September last, traveled with his family from Alton to Michigan, and, said he, "during the whole distance, going and coming from the Michigan line to Alton, I did not find myself in more than one or two public houses where intoxicating liquor was visible."

The drinking usages of 1826, where are they now? Usages among farmers and mechanics, usages among ministers and ecclesiastical bodies, usages in social parties, on the new year, the nation's birthday, and even at political meetings? Every year sees their decrease.

The police courts tell of what we are doing. The number of drunkards brought before the police courts of Philadelphia in January and February, 1840, was 69. In the same months in 1841, 28. The riots and fights were diminished in the same proportion. In four days in succession not one drunkard was brought before the mayor; sixteen and twenty a day formed the usual complement two years ago. Doctor Kane, the police justice, said a few weeks since, that nine-tenths of all the crime in the city of Albany has been occasioned by the use of intoxicating drinks—that the criminal business for the last three or four months has fallen off full six-eighths, compared with corresponding months of last year, and that temperance societies are the sole cause of this happy change. Says a late National Intelligencer, there has been a great diminution of crime in the city of Washington, in consequence of the progress of temperance.

In New York, in 1826, with a population of about 182,000 souls, the whole number of indictments tried before the court of General Sessions was 652; in 1839, with a population of about 325,000 souls, the number of indictments was reduced to 389—thus exhibiting a decrease of more than seventy-five per cent. But as yet, we have not seen the full operation of temperance in our Irish population. These, we hope, have bid a final farewell to the police office, the penitentiary and almshouse.

The license law continues; but, like the poor cast off gods of the heathen, no one pleads for it. And in every city and town the man who asks for a license will be looked at by the poor drunkard's family as seeking a commission to keep them in the dust. They will look up to the judge with a supplicating eye and ask, will you give it? In the city of New York there was a reduction of 260 in the last year. In Boston a great reduction of licenses is contemplated the coming year; and in the city of Baltimore, such is the strength of the temperance cause, that it is expected but few will ask for one. And the committee cannot but notice it as a new and favorable feature of the times, that where the license law is supported, there is on the part of the municipal authorities a strong disposition to punish every violation. From the statements of the mayor of Cincinnati, it appears that there have been fined there for selling liquor without license from December 26th, to February 25th, in all, 118 persons.

Total amount of fines assessed,	$2,489 00
Total of above collected and paid into city treasury,	1,433 00
Not collected, but in process,	832 00

The most unprincipled part of the community bear testimony to our progress. The theatre advertises there shall be no spirituous liquor sold within its walls. The circus says, it will not have it upon its grounds. The man who, with his pompous advertisement allures our youth to his frivolous and demoralizing exhibitions, and caters to the vices and follies of the age, gravely assures the public that nothing that intoxicates shall be seen on the premises. What an index of public sentiment!

An increase of domestic comfort is widely visible, and the men who contribute to it, partake of the benefit. Many a butcher has a good bill at the end of the month and well paid, from a man who seldom bought any thing in the market. Many a baker finds his business from certain families nearly doubled. Many a tailor furnishes new and handsome suits to men who were contented with a patch to cover their nakedness. Many a shoemaker now puts a smile on the drunkard's boy and an additional dollar into his own pocket. "You have a new pair of shoes," said one to a little boy in Baltimore, who had not been seen with any before. "Yes," said he, "my father has joined the Washington Temperance Society." Men lie down with new security at night. The rich with their bars and bolts may not feel it. But the poor do. "I can now," said a poor washer woman, "leave out my clothes all night since they have joined the temperance. Before, they were always a thieving."

The friends of temperance may be exposed to charges of enthusiasm. It is idle, say many, to talk of changing in an hour, the habits, fashions, and business of men. But what do we see, but that the providences of God far outstrip the most extravagant calculations. What mind, a year ago, would have ventured to predict what has been accomplished? Why would it be any more surprising to see, in less than a year, THE WHOLE TRAFFIC ABANDONED THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY than it now is to see drunkards by thousands forsaking their cups. All the signs of the times bid us look for great things. Man is contemplating with new interest the sins and miseries of his fellow man. The increasing intercourse of the nations of the earth, the facilities for diffusing knowledge, the power of the press, the disposition to know and secure every thing which tends to the amelioration of the condition of our race, and the numerous religious and moral instrumentalities which now are in operation, all insure the triumph of temperance. Ireland is a missionary nation. Wherever an Irishman goes, he carries his medal and preaches temperance. England, Scotland and Wales, are filled with bold untiring temperance spirits. Their victories during the last year have surpassed all former achievements. And though for a season they may be depressed by a lordly and luxurious aristocracy, who drink wine in bowls and care not for the affliction of Joseph, yet they will cause the leaven of temperance to work among the laboring and reflecting population, until the nation is redeemed.* The King of Prussia is favorable to us. Sweden, in spite of her 120,000 distilleries, is with us. The Russian press is at our service. The Finnish press is ours. Northern and Southern India will furnish helpers. Sable Africa will testify to our good. In Texas, Mexico, South America, and the West Indies, are those who will press our cause on surrounding darkness. Canada is second to none in the vigor and enterprise of her temperance societies.† And every missionary station on the globe is a stronghold of temperance. Every missionary family is a model of temperance; and every missionary himself a willing and most devoted agent for the spread of all the publications we put into his hands. Our American seamen too in great numbers are temperance heralds. Our navy carries the red flag, though we have officers and crews there, who will, and do preach temperance.‡ But multitudes of our merchantmen and whalers are raising the temperance banner, and spreading our principles among the nations of the earth. But our strong hope, under God, is in the youth of our land. In every part they are coming up under temperance influences, which will secure them from the ravages of the destroyer. Why should we not be confident? Why should we not already shout, VICTORY! VICTORY!!

But amid these bright prospects there are great responsibilities. The American Temperance Union and the State and local Societies have before them no common work. Not to speak of foreign operations to which they have a loud and imperious call, they are acting for a population at home which, in half a century, will be as the sand of the sea shore. Forty years ago the State of Ohio contained only 45,000 inhabitants; now a million and a half. Illinois 215 souls; now near 500,000. Should the five Western States, have a population with equal density with England, they would contain 53 millions. And should they drink even as we now do, it would require 150 million gallons of spirit annually, to supply them. Let the wheels of the temperance reformation roll backward, and let them drink as we have drank, and not 300 millions would supply them, and the earth could scarce swallow up the slain. Let these wheels roll onward and it will leave hundreds of millions of money to be employed in public improvements in private and public education, and in sending the gospel to the ends of the earth.* When have men been called to more important labor? Our work is great; but it is a work which, under God, can be accomplished. It is a work which every other benevolent enterprise says must be accomplished. It is work whose abandonment would be traitorous to all the great interests of humanity. Our means are few, and simple. With light and love, we press on our way. Our cause demands associated action; demands peace among ourselves; demands persevering and untiring exertion; demands sacrifices of time and sacrifices of property; demands that we go to it in the spirit of Christ, and above all, that it be prosecuted for the glory of Him who bought us with his precious blood.

* Appendix O.

The committee would express their gratitude for all the assistance which has been afforded them, and they would express an unwavering confidence in the public to furnish them with the necessary pecuniary aid to go on in their work; and above all, in God, to crown their labors with success.

In compliance with the request of six State Societies, they have called a third National Temperance Convention to meet at Saratoga Springs on the 4th Tuesday of July, to review the past, and take counsel for the future. They hope that every State and important local society, will be well represented, and that it will be one of the most profitable and joyful convocations ever held for the good of man.

The Committee cannot close their report without noticing the unexpected and melancholy decease of the late President of the United States, who on more than one occasion expressed a sympathy with us, and whose benevolent heart, we doubt not, would have rejoiced in the prosperity of our enterprise. Surely it bids us work while the day lasts, for "the night cometh, wherein no man can work."

APPENDIX

A. (p. 14.)

IRELAND.

The first intimation of the extraordinary reformation under the Rev. Theobald Mathew, of Cork, was furnished to the friends of Temperance in America in a letter from R. Allen, Corresponding Secretary of the Irish Temperance Union, dated Nov. 19, 1839. The number who had joined the total abstinence pledge up to April, 1840, and reported at our last anniversary, exceeded one million. From month to month through the year, the work of receiving pledges has gone on with increasing power, and according to the last advices, near five millions of the population had been enrolled for total abstinence, viz.: At

Marsboro, in three days	65,000	Limerick	10,000
Ahascragh	50,000	Thurles	65,000
" in Nov.	40,000	Templemore	70,000
Killahoe	15,000	Ballyshanscon	60,000
Athlone 14th, 15th Sept.	100,000	Enniscotty in Feb.	15,000
Dublin 28th Sept.	72,000	Cartlidenot	30,000
Castlerea in Nov.	65,000	Carlow	100,000
Butlersbridge	40,000	Maryborough	100,000
Kells Jan. 23	100,000	Bells (Meath)	100,000
Tipperary	60,000

making, including many smaller subscriptions and previous reports, Feb. 25, FOUR MILLION SIX HUNDRED AND FORTY SEVEN THOUSAND. Among these were eight Roman Catholic Prelates and seven hundred of the Catholic Clergy.

As the result, there has been great joy throughout Ireland, and a great diminution of crime. The Smithfield penitentiary, in Dublin, was in Dec. closed, as no longer needed. Richmond Bridewell had 1200 less in 1840 than in 1839, and had an hundred cells empty.

The Waterford Mirror for Jan. said:—

‘There is not a single prisoner for trial at our approaching assizes.’ The ‘Sligo Champion’ observed, ‘The crown business is a mere trifle.’ Judge Crampton, in his address to the Grand Jury of the county of Cork, after remarking on the astonishing improvement that had taken place in the moral habits of the people, observed, ‘The calendar presents a striking effect of the moral good brought about. A crime that had been of almost daily occurrence, and from which such lamentable results spring, is now nowhere to be found on the calendar. I allude to those faction-fights which had so long disgraced the country, and as arising from which species of offence, the calendar, when I last had the honor to preside here, was prolific. It is now swept away altogether.

"The 'Dublin Quarterly Review' for 1841, in a powerful article headed 'The wants of Ireland,' after alluding to the immense good that had been accomplished, observed—'One of the great results of the temperate habits already acquired by millions of our Catholic community is, the great increase that has taken place in their attendance at their respective chapels, and their participation of the Holy Sacrament.'

"Edw. Hobson, Esq., Alderman of Waterford, in a letter dated 5th of March, and addressed to Mr. J. P. Murphy, of Mount Sion, in Waterford, observed—'I am happy to say that owing to the decrease of crime in this city, the Board of Superintendence of the city jail did not apply for money from the city Grand Jury, for the support and maintenance of prisoners, as has been the case ever since I have been grand juror, now upwards of nineteen years.—The Board has now a large balance on hand, which speaks volumes, as it is the end of the long half year, the winter one.'

"In regard to the increased comfort of the people, some idea may be formed from the following facts. The 'Dublin Evening Post' remarks, 'The meat market is rising rapidly, not from excess of exportation, but from the altered habits of the people. We shall give one instance in illustration: there is a certain class of butchers in this city, who slaughter for the humbler orders. One of the most considerable of them, used to think himself very fortunate if he disposed of FIFTY sheep in a week—THREE HUNDRED scarcely supply him at present!'

"Our public hospitals bear abundant evidence also of the improved health of the people. I was informed lately by a young surgeon, that the want of broken limbs, &c., is severely felt, as subjects for young practitioners; also that there is a greatly increased difficulty in getting bodies for dissection.—In our largest hospital there has been but one case of delirium tremens (whisky fever) for several months past, and even that a doubtful one, although formerly it was not uncommon to have twenty or thirty at one time. Deaths from fever have much decreased."

Says the Corresponding Secretary of the Irish Temperance Union, in a letter to the Secretary of the American Temperance Union, dated Dublin, 10th of 4th Month, 1841.

DEAR FRIEND,—A few days since I wrote a long letter to my valued and energetic friend Edward C. Delavan. The main tenor of it was to urge you to make all the use you can of Ireland—to hold her up as a living present example of what total abstinence has achieved!—as a population of nine millions! who, freed from the soul-destroying, deadly, inexpressible curse of strong drink and drunkenness, are going on vigorously in the march of improvement, without for a moment looking behind, or indulging even the idea of returning, like a dog to its vomit, to their old sensual debasement! Yes! total abstinence, or its success, is now no debatable point in Ireland—the battle is gained—the victory is won. The great mass of the people in Leinster, Munster and Connought are teetotalers; our jails are comparatively empty; Ireland needs but few soldiers to keep her in order; excuse me, in my opinion she needs none; our police in Dublin have a sinecure; a drunken man is a rarity. Such is Ireland now! Compare it with what she was, but a short time since—famous for many things, but most of all, for drunkenness. Think, my friends, of disturbed portions of the country being now very models of peace—think of an Irish Fair without a drunken man to be seen—think of our public houses, now in hundreds, either “to be let,” or closed, or opened in other trades—think of our distillers honestly declaring that their property is all but lost—that it has depreciated from 50 to 70 per cent, and that they have now no hope of its improving; that the porter brewery would be enough for Dublin, aye! and too much; that the large Dublin distillery is now an oat meal mill, and many others in Ireland are either closed or next door to it—yet these are all facts, and not a little of what I could tell.

I observe by the “Freeman’s Journal” of yesterday morning, “that not a single case of tipping was before any of the head police of five divisions on the previous morning.” And this is Ireland! This is Dublin with its population of 250,000 and upwards, and with a vigilant day and night police looking out for drunkards. Then again look at our Savings’ Banks; in January 1840, the receipts exceeded the payments in four weeks about £2400; in January 1841, the receipts exceeded the payments L.5,200. Is not this proof positive of what is going on? Amongst “T. Mathew’s” latest triumphs were 100,000 members at Bells, in the Co. of Meath, and 25,000 at Carlukenot, but these are common matters now.

DISTILLATION.

Estimating the decrease in the quantity of malt used last year in the Irish distilleries, there appears a decrease of 2,852,416 proof gallons of whisky compared with the preceding year.

PUBLIC HOUSES.

Two hundred and thirty-seven public houses have been closed within the metropolitan police district, since January, 1840, and provision and clothing stores have multiplied as rapidly as the public houses have decreased.

IRISH EXCHEQUER.

In submitting his budget to the British House of Commons, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord John Russell, stated, “that there was a falling off in the duty on spirits, in Ireland, of £354,000, (which is $1,770,000,) which, he added, was no proof, and he felt pleasure in stating it, of the decreased resources of that country, for it was entirely owing to the increased habits of temperance in the people of that country. On the other hand, the payments into the Irish Exchequer showed an increase in the amount of duties on tea, coffee and other conveniences and comforts of life.”

SALES OF LANDED AND OTHER PROPERTY.

Mr. W. W. Simpson, the eminent auctioneer of London, has been engaged here during the last three days, in offering for sale, by auction, extensive property.

Mr. SIMPSON, at a public meeting, took occasion to observe that he was exceedingly gratified to mark, at every succeeding visit to this country, the progressive increase in the value of property, and said he could not but attribute much of this improvement to the beneficial effects of the temperance movement which had been most unfairly represented as one of a political character, (brought forward to serve the purposes of a party inimical to Protestant ascendancy,) while, on the contrary, it was, in truth, a stupendous moral reformation, and the great and good man who had accomplished it ought to be regarded as one of the most distinguished benefactors of his country; Mr. Simpson added, that he had had the pleasure of conversing with Father Mathew, (whom he believed to be one of the most pure minded and benevolent men of the age,) who had assured him that the members of the Tetotal Society were bound by nothing but a solemn promise, which they might retract whenever they thought proper. From extensive observation and careful inquiry, Mr. Simpson said he was convinced that the movement must be regarded by all but the prejudiced, as subservient to the promotion of morality and industry, and consequently to the increase of public order and domestic happiness, and it could not by any possibility be so perverted as to become injurious to the interests of the community. Mr. Simpson stated that in the wildest parts of the county of Tipperary, which he had recently passed through, property had acquired a value which brought it fully up to the level of that situated in what had been heretofore considered the more favored districts, and this was solely to be attributed, in his opinion, to the improved habits of the people—the districts which were formerly the constant scene of riot and drunkenness being now the peaceful abode of orderly and industrious peasants. During surveys in the latter part of last year, in the counties of Cork, Tipperary, and Westmeath, Mr. Simpson said he had frequent opportunities of observing the movement in the conduct of the peasantry, and of obtaining accurate information as to the present state of the country, and he could not but arrive at the conviction that in some localities the office of the policeman had been almost a sinecure. As an evidence of the increasing confidence of English capitalists in the stability of Irish property, Mr. Simpson mentioned that, during the last twelve months, he had been successful in negotiating several heavy loans at four-and-a-half per cent. on Irish security, and that just previously to his departure from London he had been offered £100,000, by way of mortgage, at the same rate of interest, on landed property in Ireland.

IRISH IN AMERICA.

The following number of signatures have come to the knowledge of the Committee. In some cases, as in New York city, the pledge is in itself very defective, though the practical operation is said not to differ; but in most instances it is the true one—total abstinence from all that intoxicates.

New York city	10,000	Amsterdam	800
Brooklyn	3000	Little Falls	1200
Philadelphia	6000	Utica	1000
Boston	6000	Buffalo	800
Providence	1000	Cleveland	1500
Lowell	2000	Detroit	1000
Albany	3200	Montreal	6900
West Troy	1600	Baltimore	3000
Schenectady	800	Georgetown	350
		Washington City	400

In most of the American cities St. Patrick's day was improved for a demonstration of temperance. Thousands who had been in the habit of paying their anniversary homage to their Patron Saint in the taverns and dramshops, appeared in procession, neatly attired with appropriate medals and beautiful banners dedicated to the cause of temperance. The results of this reform upon the health, thrift, peace and prosperity of this great portion of the American population cannot be told.

B. (P. 14.)

MR. BAIRD'S SECOND VISIT TO THE NORTH OF EUROPE.

Mr. Baird left Havre for Hamburg, July 1840. In this city he formed a temperance society of 250 members, and found that since his former visit, 200,000 temperance publications had been distributed over Western Germany. At Copenhagen he made arrangements to have his history of Temperance Societies translated into the Danish, and 2,000 copies published, one half for Norway. At Christiana, the capital of Norway, he organized a committee of three to distribute them. In passing from Gottenburg to Stockholm he was the only person on board the steamboat who did not take brandy. Sweden he found a great manufacturing and drinking country. Four years ago he learned that with a population of three millions, Sweden produced in 150,000 distilleries fifty millions gallons of whisky, and in the last year in 125,000 distilleries, forty millions gallons, and that every man, almost without exception, drank his glass three times a day. At Stockholm, he was cordially welcomed by the king and nation; he addressed an assembly of 2,000 persons, including the diet, nobles, clergy, burghers, and peasants; attended a large Temperance Convention in the north of Sweden, traveled four hundred miles, and addressed many thousands of people; had an interview with the king, and addressed at Stockholm the peasants and a general assembly of nobles and people, the prime minister presiding. Forty thousand persons in Sweden have joined the temperance societies. Many distinguished individuals were induced to renounce the brandy table. Two temperance journals exist. In October Mr. Baird went to St. Petersburg, and found that his Temperance History had not been published. He hastened to Moscow to ascertain the cause, and found it in a state of readiness for publication. At the palace, sixteen miles from St. Petersburg, he had an interview with the Emperor Nicholas, who acceded to the proposal to have the History of the Temperance Reformation published in the Russian and expressed a desire to have it also published in the Finnish, and promised that it should not be interrupted by the censors. The work of translating and publishing was at once commenced. The revenue of Russia is 600,000,000 rubles, of which 125,000,000, or $25,000,000 of our money, is derived from licenses. A Russian nobleman in Courland was so convinced by reading the Temperance History in German, of the evils of drinking ardent spirits, that he agreed to pay the government the sum which the retailers had undertaken to pay for the licenses, in order to have no brandy sold on his extensive estates.

At Bremen, Mr. B. found no temperance society existing. One at Hanover with three hundred members. One at Göttingen. In Prussia he found the cause making steady, but not rapid progress. It needs a national society and an enlightened agent. In the province of Es-part are one hundred and seventy three temperance societies, embracing several thousand members, chiefly on the moderation plan. At Dresden he was introduced to the king. At Munich, Stutgard, Heidelberg, and Frankfort, he conversed with several distinguished individuals on temperance, and returned to Paris in December, having been absent five months, and traveled 6,500 miles. The American Tract Society have furnished 700 dollars to aid in the publications.

C. (P. 16.)

REFORMATION OF DRUNKARDS.

This extraordinary work commenced in Baltimore, April 5th, 1840. Six men of intemperate habits, while over their cups in a public tavern, suddenly resolved that they would drink no more, and formed and signed a simple pledge of total abstinence. They also resolved to form a society to be called the Washington Temperance Society, and at their successive meetings, each man to bring a man. These meetings soon attracted attention, through a public relation by each individual of his own experience and history. The members became indefatigable in their work of reforming drunkards, and in less than one year, their society numbered more than one thousand members, the greater part of whom had been grossly intemperate. Other societies were excited to action by this extraordinary movement, and greatly increased their numbers, both from the intemperate as well as from moderate drinkers, so that in the entire city more than a thousand drunkards were reputed as reformed men.

On the 5th of April, 1841, the anniversary of the Washington Temperance Society was celebrated by a public procession. More than six thousand men and youth from the various temperance societies, formed in the principal street of Baltimore, every society having its own banner, and each member wearing his appropriate badge. The whole, cheered on by bands of music and the acclamation of thousands of spectators, marched in deep columns through the principal parts of the city, to Mount Vernon, where, in front of the monument to the Father of his country, they formed in solid mass, and, standing uncovered but by the canopy of heaven, returned thanks to him who had had mercy upon the poor unfortunate drunkard. The scene was one of intense interest, and fraught with the most affecting consequences to the numerous individuals and families who had experienced deliverance.

Anxious for a similar blessing, the Executive Committee of the New York City Temperance Society, invited five of their number, reformed men, to come to their city and relate their experience. The novelty of the affair and the character of the exercises attracted crowds to hear them. More than twenty successive meetings were held in the largest churches, and one in the Park, and above two thousand persons gave their names to the pledge of total abstinence. But what was of most importance, the sympathies of the miserable drunkard were at once enlisted, and a large number came forward and signed the pledge. These, like their brethren at Baltimore, became at once actively engaged for the reformation of drunkards, formed a Washington Society for New York, and now number from four to five hundred members, chiefly reformed men.

From New York, two of their number proceeded to Boston, where they were cordially received by the friends of temperance, and where their simple tale was most effective in rousing the attention of the community to the evils of intemperance, and of bringing many a miserable man to take the pledge and become a member of a Boston Washington Temperance Society, already numbering more than sixteen hundred members.

On the 22d of April, a great meeting was held at Faneuil Hall. The Hall was crowded to excess. The Hon. Theodore Lyman, ex-mayor, presided, and made the following introductory remarks:—

"Gentlemen—We have assembled under new and interesting circumstances. A new effort, and a new development in the history of the great cause of Temperance, is presented to our view. It relates to a class who have been regarded as outcasts, and no one can doubt or wonder why they have been so regarded. Vice cannot be concealed; and the poor inebriate has but too painfully reaped as he has sowed. If there can be no doubt of this degradation of the man who would otherwise have been respectable, and prosperous, and perhaps eminent, but instead of being thus, is degraded, then it becomes us to look about us and see what has been the cause of it. Why is it? who has done it? the person who administers or society which permits it? Society is interested to look into it, and to remove the cause. It is a duty both to God and man."

"I have alluded to the case of the unhappy, unfortunate man. What now is the condition of the wife and mother? How many wives of such men are obliged to work and toil hard and late for the support of a family—to suffer reproach, rebuke, self denial, and domestic weariness and want! And how many children are left to grow up in poverty and suffering—how many become burdens to society, or thieves to prey upon community! Accountability rests somewhere. Somebody must answer for all this; and so long as there is responsibility, society must try the experiment of a removal, and not faint until it is accomplished."

The meeting was then addressed by Mr. John Hawkins, and Mr. Wright, the two Baltimore delegates, and the following resolutions adopted.

Resolved, That we receive with gladness, in this Temple of Liberty, the delegates from the Washington Baltimore Temperance Society of reformed inebriates, and hail the noble stand they have taken in the cause of humanity, as marking a new era in the Temperance reformation—that their example is a living argument, which nothing can refute, and that it is expedient to form a similar Society in this city.

Resolved, That the approbation of distinguished patriots and statesmen encourage us to persevere in the cause in which we are engaged, and that we will not relax our efforts until the land is redeemed from the pestilence which invades it—that we will invoke the dealer, until he shall say in his heart, in the language of the lamented Harrison, "Whereas I have sinned—I will sin no more:" and those who are in bondage to the tyrant alcohol, we will urge, to break their fetters, and be "as of right they ought to be, free and independent" citizens—and to the young and rising generation, who have not yet put on the chains of the moral despot, we will echo around these consecrated walls, glowing with the almost speaking resemblances of the sires of our country's freedom, the impressive injunction of one of the earliest martyrs to her liberty—"My sons scorn to be slaves."

At AUGUSTA, ME. was formed on the 1st of April, a Washington Temperance Society—and the last Maine Gazette says:—"We perceive as yet no abatement of enthusiasm, or rather we think, of healthful excitement, which keeps them in excellent spirits, and prompt and energetic in their efforts to extend the influence of their good work. No one acquainted in Augusta can walk our streets, without being impressed with the change that has taken place amongst us, and all has been done so kindly—so pleasantly—we can scarcely tell how—and yet, it is done. Our dramshops are in a great measure forsaken, and those who lately thronged them, with freshened countenances and elastic step, are industriously devoting themselves to the proper business of life, diffusing joy and gladness around their domestic circles.

"It is a pleasant treat to sit down, as it has often been our privilege to do, in their crowded hall, and listen to what they say of their experience. If we always had pen in hand, we could have gathered up many pithy sayings, that would interest our readers. Said one, a few evenings since, "I have saved a double tax: my rum tax and my barber's tax. A few days ago my hand trembled so that I could not shave myself, but now I can do it without difficulty. All things go on well at home—I have as happy a family as any other man!" The same individual was lately visited by a brother-in-law, who very soon, according to former custom, invited him to go and take something to drink. "No," said he, "I've done." "What! you!" said his friend, overwhelmed with astonishment to have a refusal from him. "I have signed the pledge, I drink no more rum." "Well," said his visitor, "I will drink no more, till you do—and if you will persevere, I will give you the best cow on my farm." "I like that name, reformed drunkard," said one of the shrewdest of them the other evening: "for if I have not been a drunkard, I have been a most outrageous soaker. For the last week I have had employment—have paid for my house rent and provisions for my family, and have laid up more money than I did all last summer." One, a sea captain, just returned from Boston, stated that he heard, while in Boston, of what was doing in Augusta. He immediately said to his informant, "If Fred. Pishon has joined the Temperance Society, I will drink no more till he does." He returned home, and behold "Fred. Pishon" had pledged himself to abstain from all that can intoxicate forever: and he means to stick to it. The number of members on Monday evening was one hundred and eighteen. On that day, in compliance with an invitation from Bath, a delegation of four members went down in the Minerva, to assist in laying the corner stone of a Washington Temperance Society there. The Society here is to have a public meeting at the Baptist Church on Friday afternoon."

Societies have been more recently formed at Portland, Hallowell, Gardner, Belfast, Bangor, and other places.

Thus the work is spreading over our country. O let it spread! and may there be a Washington Society in every place where there is a poor drunkard. It is the great movement which now, under God, is to save thousands that are perishing.

SPEECH OF MR. JOHN HAWKINS, OF BALTIMORE, AT FANEUIL

HALL. MAY, 1841.

When I compare the past with the present—my days of intemperance with my present peace and sobriety—my past degradation with my present position in this Hall—the Cradle of Liberty—I am overwhelmed. It seems to me holy ground. I never expected to see this Hall. I had heard of it in boyhood. It was here that Otis and the elder Adams argued the principles of independence, and we now meet here to declare ourselves free and independent; to make a second Declaration—not quite so lengthy as the old one, but it promises life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Our Forefathers pledged their lives and fortunes and sacred honors; we, too, will pledge our honor, our life, but our fortunes have gone for rum! Poor though we drunkards are, and miserable, even in the gutter, we will pledge our lives to maintain sobriety.

The cause of Temperance! what is it, but the cause of humanity? I need not talk long to show its connection with humanity. I have suffered from every description of drunkenness—have borne the heat and burden of the day in rum-mills (grog-shops), and know all about it—and I rejoice to say, in this Cradle of Liberty, that whereas I was once a drunkard, I am now a sober man, and always mean to be.

I represent 2000 reformed drunkards, saved in one year, and now connected with the Washington Temperance Society of Baltimore and its auxiliaries. Our Society originated in a rum-mill where twenty of us, all drunkards, resorted. Our pledge was drawn up, and first signed by six persons, who now stand firm in the cause—the President, Mr. Mitchel, is a host in himself. Our meetings are held every night in a week, and we find it as pleasant and good a way to spend our time as it ever was at a tavern; aye, more pleasant, and in better company than in those little hells upon earth. At our meetings we don't sit and look at each other, and say nothing. No! you can't keep us from talking. One said, 'I feel better, though I am growing smaller and look pale; my ideas are clearer: I eat better, and feel happy.' Another, 'My wife is so happy, and every thing goes so nice at home; children so rejoiced;' and so we went over the ground, telling our experiences, and we had none too much time, I assure you. We found enough to tell about ourselves, our homes and our old grog-shops, to make a long evening short. We would have no sectarianism, no politics or arguments. Whoever ventured upon either was made to take his seat; he must tell his own experience, and not another's—'Tell us how often you have been drunk, and what rum has done to you and your family; and how you now feel, and what cold water is doing for you.'

Total abstinence is the basis—no proscription of men, ONLY THE LIQUOR. Men who sell rum may take our pledge and join us; and we would like well to have the man who sells 20 hogsheads a week come and attend our meetings, and if we did not give him enough I am mistaken. He knows when the mechanic earns only twelve dollars a week and spends five of it at his tavern bar; he knows that he has taken his money and given no equivalent; that it is wrong to vend out an article that will send millions to a drunkard's grave.

We cover all under rum and rum-mills. You may talk of your gin and wine—it is no matter what you call it—we know there is no difference; you may as well drink one as another. Twenty years ago we drank everywhere, on all occasions, and the question we asked was, ‘does he keep a good bottle!’ and when we could not get a good one, a bad one would do.

I was born of respectable parents, and was educated by a minister, and then bound out to the hatting business, in as perfect a grog-shop as ever existed. A few days before I left Baltimore I found the old books of my master, there were the names of sixty men upon it; and we could recollect but one that did not go to a drunkard’s grave. Another hatter says it was just so on his books. At one time there were twelve of us as apprentices; eight of the twelve have died drunkards, one is now in the almshouse in Cincinnati, one in the almshouse of Baltimore, one is keeping a tavern in Baltimore, and here am I.

For awhile I was prosperous, notwithstanding I drank on; I did not expect the appetite to conquer me. Well, when 22 years old, in 1818, I went to the West. As soon as away from parental care, I gave way; all went by the board, and my sufferings commenced. For six months I had no shoes, and only one shirt and one pair of pantaloons. Then I was a vagabond indeed. But I returned, ragged and bloated, to my mother’s home. When I got to the edge of the town, I was ashamed even to walk on the ground of my nativity. In the dusk of evening I crept along to my mother’s, and was soon dressed up decently. My mother only said, ‘John, I am afraid you are bloated.’ I then drank nothing for awhile; but it was so hard to do without, that, at length, I took a glass of ale, and all was over with me again; my appetite rushed on like a flood and carried all before it. And for fifteen years, time after time, I rose and fell; was up and down; would quit all, and then take a little glass. I would earn $15 a week, be happy and well, and with my money in hand start for home, and in some unaccountable way, imperceptibly and irresistibly, fall into a tavern, and think one glass only would do me good. But I found that a single glass of ale would conquer all my resolutions. I appeal to all my fellow drunkards if it is not exactly so—if the one glass of any intoxicating drink does not annihilate, by revival of the appetite, all resolutions to resist drinking on. I am satisfied this appetite is rooted in me, and I never expect to get rid of it. It is like mercury in the thermometer—keep heat away from it and it will not rise, but apply the heat of your finger and it will rise at once.

June 13th last, I drank and suffered awfully—I can’t tell you how much I suffered in mind—in body everything, but in mind more. I drank dreadfully the two first weeks of June—bought by the gallon, and drank, and drank, and was about taking my life—drunk all the time. On the 14th, I was a wonder to myself; astonished I had any mind left, and yet it seemed in the goodness of God uncommonly clear. I laid in bed long after my wife and daughter were up, and my conscience drove me to madness. I hated the darkness of the night, and when light came I hated the light. I hated myself—my existence. I asked myself, ‘Can I refrain;’ ‘is it possible.’ Not a being to take me by the hand, and lead or help me along and say, ‘YOU CAN.’ I was friendless; without help, or light; an outcast. My wife came up stairs and knew I was suffering, and asked me to go down to breakfast. I had a pint of whisky, and thought I would drink; and yet I knew it was life or death with me as I decided. Moderate drinkers, beware! Take care you don't get into this condition! Well, I told my wife I would come down presently. Then my daughter came up and asked me down. I always loved her. More because she was the drunkard's friend—my only friend. And then she said, 'Father don't send me after whisky to-day.' I was tormented before, but this was an unexpected torture. I told her to leave the chamber, and she went down crying, and said to her mother, father is angry with me. Wife came up again, and asked me to take some coffee; I told her I did not want anything of her, and covered myself in the bed. I soon heard some one enter the room, and I peeped out and saw it was my daughter. I then thought of my past life; my degradation; misery of my friends; and felt bad enough. So I called her and said, 'Hannah, I am not angry with you, and I shall not drink any more.' She cried, and so did I. I got up and went to the cupboard and looked at the enemy, my whisky bottle, and thought, 'Is it possible I can be restored,' and then turned my back upon it. Several times while dressing, I looked at the bottle but thought I should be lost if I yielded. Poor drunkard! there is hope for you. You cannot be worse off than I was; not more degraded, or more of a slave to appetite. You can reform if you will. Try it—try it. I felt badly, I tell you. There are some here to-night, who know how I felt. I know you feel bad enough. I have talked with some of you. Some say, we feel bad. Some, we feel better, and some say we feel FIRST RATE. Well, Monday night I went to the Society of reformed Drunkards, and there I found my old companions. I did not tell any body I was going, not even my wife. I had got out of difficulty, but did not know how long I would keep out. The six founders of the society were there. We had fished together; got drunk together. You could not break us up when drunk. We stuck like brothers, and so we do now we are sober. One said here is Hawkins, the 'regulator,' the old bruiser; and they clapped and laughed as you do now. But there was no laugh or clap in me. I was too sober and solemn for that. The pledge was read for my accommodation. They did not say so and yet I knew. They all looked over my shoulder to see me write my name. I never had such feelings before. It was a great battle. I once fought the battle at North Point, and helped to run away too, but now there was no running away. I found the Society had a large pitcher of water—drank toasts and told experiences. There I laid my plan; I did not intend to be a drone. Alcohol promised me everything, but I found him a great deceiver, and now I mean to do him all the harm I can.

At eleven I went home. Because, when I staid out late, I always went home drunk, my wife had given me up again, and thought I would be home drunk again, and she began to think about breaking up and going home her to mother's. My yard is covered with brick, and as I went over the brick, wife listened as she told me, to determine whether the gate-door opened drunk or sober, for she could tell, and it opened sober and shut sober; and when I entered, my wife was standing in the middle of the room to see me as I came in. She was astonished, but I smiled and she smiled, as I caught her keen black eye. I told her quick; I could not keep it back. "I have put my name to the temperance pledge, never to drink as long as I live." It was a happy time. I cried and she cried; we could not hush it, and our crying waked up our daughter, and she cried too. I tell you this that you may know how happy the reformation of a drunkard makes his family. I slept none that night, my thoughts were better than sleep. Next morning I went to see my old mother, I thought I must go to see her and tell her of our joy. She had been praying twenty years for her drunken son. Now she said, "It is enough, I am ready to die." It made all my connections happy.

The next thing was to determine what was to be done. My mind was blunted—character gone—I was bloated, and was getting old; but men who had slighted me came to my help again and took me by the hand, held me up, encouraged and comforted me. I'll never slight a drunkard as long as I live; he needs sympathy and is worthy of it, poor and miserable as he is; he did not design to become a drunkard; and people have too long told him he cannot reform; it is no use; he must die a drunkard. But now we assure him he can reform and need not live or die so, and we show ourselves, 2,000 in one year, as evidence of the fact. The poor wretch here is crammed into the poor-house or prison, and when he comes out he meets temptation at every step—he begs you to succor him; but he is led by appetite and neglect, straight to the grog-shop. Drunkard! come up here, you can reform—take the pledge in this Cradle of Liberty, and be ever free! Delay not. I met a gentleman this morning, who reformed four weeks ago, rejoicing in his reformation. He brought a man with him who took the pledge, and this man has already brought two others. This is the way we do the business up in Baltimore; we reformed drunkards are a Committee of the whole on the state of the Union! are all missionaries—don't slight the drunkard, but love him. No! we nurse him as the mother does her infant learning to walk. We go right up to him and say, how do you do? and he remembers our kindness. I tell you be kind to him and he'll never forget you. He has peculiar feelings when the boys run after him and boot at him;—take his part and he'll never forget it. He has better feelings than the moderate drinker;—don't lay a stumbling block in his way. One man—poor, miserable, wretched, ragged—a real wharf-rat—(I expect you have such here, we had plenty of them in Baltimore, but much lessened now,) he was a buster, about a year ago, his clothes not fit for paper rags, his family had nothing to eat, no fuel, not even clothes,—I'd give you his name, but won't trouble you, as he and his were not worth a "fip-ny-bit;"—well, he told his brother he was going to quit and wanted him to go his security for a horse and cart, but he would not. Our members then went to his brother, and he was persuaded. He has paid for his horse and cart, his family and himself are well clothed, cellar full of wood, a barrel of flour; and he has become a gentleman and Christian. And all this in one short year.

Just let me tell you about one of our reformed men. We all of us changed a great deal in our appearance—some grew thin—some pale—but a dark complexioned man grew yellow, and the grog-seller, noticing the change in others, and seeing his old customer not becoming white, said he did not believe he had quit it altogether. The man heard of it, and prepared himself for an interview—so happened in his way.

These taverners are apt to complain, say we do them an injury because we shared our money for the support of our families—quite villainous to be sure! And so they charge us with drinking a little; but

I tell you that we keep close watch of each other, we are very loving and we take care to get along side the mouth and know pretty well what has been going on there.

As I was going to tell you, the taverner said to the member, "It appears to me you don't alter quite so much as some of the rest." "Don't I," said he, "well, why don't I?" "Why you don't look pale, you grow yallar." "I grow yallar you think?" "Yes." Well said the man drawing out a handful of gold pieces from his pantaloons pocket, "these look yallar too, but you don't get any more of them, they belong here," returning them to his pocket—"and my wife will have them—you'll get no more of them—that is the trouble with you."

These grog sellers know how to fix the drunkard—they understand their business—they keep a big plate of salt-fish—cheese, herring and crackers, to fix the appetite—all free—don't ask anything of course, for them; but when they see a man take hold and eat a little, they think they have him, he'll want to wash it down—he'll get started, and "he'll do well enough yet." Well the stuff is very apt to stick in the throat, so it is washed down—and then the breath must be changed, and a little more fish or cheese is taken, and that must be washed out of the throat, and so it goes. But if a man eats and don't drink, he is pretty sure to be told that that will not do.

This drinking has killed more men, women and children, than war, pestilence, and all other evils together. You cannot bring upon man so awful a curse as alcohol; it cannot be done; no machinery or invention of death can work like it. Is there a moderate drinker who says he can use "a little," or "much," and "quit when he pleases?" I tell him from experience he can't do it. Well he can, if he will, but HE WON'T WILL, that is the difficulty, and there is the fatal mistake. Does he want to know whether he can? I ask him to go without his accustomed morning bitters, or his eleven o'clock, to-morrow, and he will find how he loves it! We have come up out of the gutter to tell him how he loves it, and how he may escape. It is the moderate use—the little, the pretty drink, the genteel and fashionable, that does the mischief—the moderate drinker is training to take the place of the drunkard.

Go to Baltimore and see now our happy wives and families. Only look at our procession on the 5th of April, when we celebrated our anniversary. Six thousand men, nearly half of them reformed within a year, followed by two thousand boys of all ages, to give assurance to the world that the next generation shall be sober. But where were our wives on that occasion? at home, shut up with hungry children in rags as a year ago? No! no! but in carriages riding round the streets to see their sober husbands.

My family were in a hack and I carried apples, cakes, &c., to them, and wife said, "how happy all look," why husband there is ——— all dressed up—and only think, I saw old ——— in the procession as happy and smart as any of them, and so she went on telling me who she had seen. And where do you think the grog seller's wives were? Were they out? Not they!!! Some of them peeped out from behind their curtains! We cut down the rum tree that day in Baltimore, under ground; not on top of the ground leaving a stump, but under ground, roots and all!!

We have not seen six drunkards staggering in the streets since we have been in Boston; and we have been all around, even in Ann street.

They must hide themselves. If they are put into the House of Correction, I don't wonder they hide. I said when I talked to them on the Sabbath, over there, that I wished I had a distiller at my right hand, and a rum-seller at my left, and let them answer the question, what brought all these here? and we would have had the answer RUM. This making the drunkard by a thousand temptations and inducements, and then shutting him up in a prison, is a cruel and horrible business. You make the drunkard, and then let him come into your house and you turn him out; let him come to the church and you turn him out; friends cast him off; the grog-seller turns him out when his money is gone, or midnight comes. When he serves his time out in the prison, he is turned out with the threat of a flogging if he is ever caught again; and yet you keep open the place where he is entangled and destroyed. You are bound to turn the whole tide of public opinion against the traffic. The seller will pour down your son's throat a tide of liquor, and you do so to his son and he would cut your throat. Ask him if he is willing you should make his daughter a drunkard? and why should he make your son one?

WHAT SHALL BE THE DRINK OF THE REFORMED MEN?

BY DOCTOR SAMUEL B. WOODWARD, OF WORCESTER, MASS.

Intemperate persons may quit the practice of using alcoholic drinks at once. A very prevalent opinion is that it is unsafe for them to do so, and that the only way to do it prudently, is to do it gradually, and cautiously. There is no more propriety in suspending it by degrees than there would be in leaving off stealing, lying, or profanity, by little and little; which to all persons must appear quite ridiculous. Who ever thought of pulling a child out of the fire, gradually, for fear of increasing the dangers? No more propriety is there in discontinuing the use of intoxicating liquors, gradually, by those who have used them to excess. The modern practice, to withdraw all spiritous liquors from those who have been intemperate, at once, and resorting to no substitute, is found not only the most certain mode of curing the habit, but quite the most easy for the patient. The suffering may be sharp, but it is soon over, and then renovation and recovery begin. The opinion that delirium tremens, or the horrors, is the consequence of discontinuing the accustomed potations is founded in error: the loss of the appetite for the stimulus is the first symptom of disease. Much experience has convinced the writer of this truth, and his experience is of such a kind as to admit of no mistake in application to the disease in question. Medical treatment may in some cases be indisputable, but the individual must not only be satisfied that his disease is curable, and that the effects can be wholly eradicated from his system if he will forever abandon all intoxicating drinks, but also that he can return to society with his friends as he would have done if his misfortune had never come upon him. This state of feeling will pervade society at last, and the intemperate man, cured of his malady, will be as cordially received by his friends as if he had been restored from insanity or fever. Imprudence and thoughtlessness lead to many of the evils to which life is incident, and the class of men who have been led into intemperance are often generous, unsuspicious, social, hospitable; their very good nature is not unfrequently the cause of all their woes: they yield readily to enticements, not so much from a propensity to evil as from a want of firmness to resist temptation—not so much to gratify themselves as to oblige others. How often it is said of the victim of intemperance,—he was the finest young man of the neighborhood—intelligent, kind, and generous. His social feelings led him into company, his generous disposition made him to be hospitable, when hospitality was manifested by the flowing bowl and the social glass, of which he partook freely and was ruined. This might be the epitaph of many a young man of genius, who gave promise of great usefulness and eminence; now alas! sunk to an intemely grave, or what is little better, living in the mire and wallowing of intemperance. It follows from the foregoing, that it is all important for those who would be cured of intemperance to know how they should proceed, in future, respecting drinks. Some have heretofore recommended wine to such persons, some ale or strong beer, and others cider. The only safe course, however, is to abstain wholly, and totally from all alcoholic drinks, by which I mean every thing which can intoxicate. The inebriate, especially, should resolve to touch not, taste not, handle not the poison. In this course there is safety and in no other. Even cider will induce a love of something stronger, and as the natural tendency is to desire an increase of strength, it will increase the danger of a relapse. On this subject principle should guide a man, and not appetite, or fashion, or the opinions of others.

The intemperate man rescued from his dangers, standing aloof from all intoxicating articles is perfectly safe: he can never become intemperate again. Allow him one drink of cider or one glass of wine to begin with, and can this be said of him? Certainly not. He must stand firm to his principles of tasting nothing which can intoxicate, both now and forever. Strong beer is worse than cider. Wine is worse than either.

The question then fairly presents itself—what SHALL BE THE DRINK OF THOSE PERSONS WHO HAVE ABANDONED ALCOHOL IN ALL ITS FORMS? To that question the temperance community would answer. "Principally water." This is doubtless the natural drink of all animals; it is the purest and most appropriate drink in its natural state, as received from the fountain; pure cold water, the greatest luxury in creation, incomparably more congenial to the taste of the thirsty man than any other liquid, however costly, and however mixed to gratify the taste. Prepared with tea and coffee it is also agreeable and harmless. For invalids who cannot bear cold water, weak tea, coffee, or even warm water with milk and sugar added, is all that is useful.

In conclusion, let no one say Intemperance cannot be cured. It has been, and may be again, in nearly or quite every case, if reason is not dethroned, however inveterate the habit, or long continued it has been. But if the power of self restraint is wholly gone, and the individual is alike deaf to the admonitions of conscience, and the entreaties and warnings of friends, he must be withdrawn from temptation, and placed in an asylum, under the care of a kind and skilful medical attendant, until new habits and appetites are formed, when health and vigorous purpose will place him in a position to regain all that had been lost.

EXTRACT FROM DR. REESE'S "PLEA FOR THE INTEMPERATE."

The most attractive feature of the Temperance reformation, now in successful progress through the earth, is found in the demonstrations which are beginning to be made, that there is no state of degradation and infamy to which human beings can be reduced, even by drunkenness, which places them beyond the reach of the instrumentalities now employed. While these pages are in preparation for the press, in one of our neighboring cities, some hundreds of the most besotted victims of intemperance, have set about reforming each other, each helping the other to do what neither is able to do for himself, or by his single unaided efforts. The result, as exemplified in the recent revival of Temperance in Baltimore, and especially by the instrumentality of the "Washington Temperance Society" of that city, should annihilate the incredulity of the most sceptical, and may be regarded as designed in the developments of Divine Providence, to settle the question forever, that no drunkard need despair. But even this consummation will be attained more readily, and the drunken be more easily convinced that for them there is yet hope, than will the unbelief of some Christians give way before the evidences equally conclusive, that we ourselves have no warrant either from reason or revelation, to despair of any drunkard, while on this side of hell.

Among the examples of reformation recently witnessed in Baltimore, there are found the young, the middle-aged, and the gray-headed; scores, and even hundreds of each, who were confessedly, and notoriously among the habitual drunkards. Some of these have prostrated their health, and been the repeated tenants of the Hospital, Infirmary, or Almshouse, by reason of the "tremors," "horrors," or insanity, which drunkenness had inflicted. Others had wasted their property, beggared their families, forfeited their characters, and been abandoned by all for years, as vagrants and vagabonds, until they were reduced to the last extremity of pauperism and unutterable wretchedness. And yet even such have been recovered, reclaimed, restored to their right mind, and this too by the very first effort ever put forth systematically, in their behalf. Not until now, did any messenger "go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in." They have been literally "standing in the market-place all the day idle," some of them until the "eleventh hour" of life has overtaken them; and now to the first inquiry, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" they have literally and truly replied; "Because no man hath hired us." The first invitation to go into the vineyard, has met a ready response, and now it is easy for us to decide, where the greater amount of blame lies,—upon the idlers who are perishing, or upon us, who have neglected to afford them employment, or in other words, made no effort to rescue them.

What a memorable reproof is given to Christians for their indolence and unbelief, by the multiplied proofs now furnished, that those whom they have regarded by common consent, as incapable of reformation, and unworthy of an effort, have nevertheless been successfully reached, by those who were but yesterday their companions in drunkenness, and this by the first attempt to extend to them the helping hand. They would have been rescued long since had any one sufficiently cared for their souls, to adopt the means, and employ the instrumen-tality which has now been successful. The guilt of their continuing in drunkenness is ours, not theirs. And who can fail to tremble at the thought of how many "souls might have been saved from death," and what "a multitude of sins would have been covered," if enlightened views had prevailed in the public mind, and all these sinners "been converted from the error of their ways" long since, as they might have been, had the same kind and degree of human instrumentality been employed in the work.

That hundreds of the drunken, and scores of the most hopeless class, have been reformed in the recent revival in Baltimore, is matter of public notoriety. That this reformation promises to be radical and permanent, we have the evidence of their sobriety and conformity to their vow of total abstinence, for several months. Their improved condition, physically, morally, and socially, added to the powerful motives of reputation and self respect, the influence of which they now realize and estimate, all combine to guarantee their perseverance. Beside which, the kindred spirits with whom they are associated in mutual auxiliary relations, each sympathizing with, and aiding one another, inspired by the same motives, and combining their energies for the same end, that of bringing others to share with them the blessings of temperance, give still stronger assurance that they will not hazard the forfeiture of all they have gained without a desperate struggle. The vigilance with which they watch over themselves, and each other, for good and not for evil, will also serve as a barrier against a relapse, since their hopes and fears, their sympathies and dangers, are alike participated in by all. Under such a combination of circumstances we have the best security for thorough and enduring reformation, which can be furnished by any merely human agencies.

But who can doubt that such a reformation will bring its subjects under the influence of the instrumentalities of our holy religion from which their former associations and habits almost excluded them? Indeed the facts have already shown this desirable result, and instances are known in which already the physical and moral revolution, which has been consequent upon their recovery from drunkenness, has been followed by a self consecration to the services, obligation, and duties of personal religion.

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The example of these true reformers has not been confined to their own city. They have been as men set upon a hill, and have been seen by distant states. The effect in Boston has been marvellous indeed. A society of reformed drunkards has been formed here within a few days, and after a few meetings only it now numbers hundreds among its members. Minds which have for years been lost to all worthy effort or work, are now putting themselves forth in the labor of saving themselves, and of ministering to their very best ability to the moral, the spiritual, and intellectual recovery and salvation of others. Some entirely new facts have been revealed by these mighty revolutions. A very striking one, is, the consciousness of strength, of power to resist the temptation which surrounds them, and which labors in every way to draw them again into ruin. The effort is represented as tremendous to escape from the thralldom of long continued habit which has become as life to these wretched men. But when the effort is made in sincerity, when the man means to be free—that he will be a slave no longer—he puts his foot as upon a rock of adamant, and says in a power, which it is believed, is never to be conquered, that he will persist to the end. This done, we are told how deep is the peace—how full is the joy—how easy is the work. The appetite, indeed, remains ready at any moment to be brought forth in the whole of its strength; but to counterbalance it, there is in the reformation, as an element, a power of WILL developed which is sovereign over appetite, and which says to it with the fullest confidence and effect, ‘peace, be still.’ Such, in a few words, is a sketch of the mighty change which, within the year we now record, has been made in the temperance reform. All this is new. It belongs to nothing else. Like the wind which bloweth where it listeth, so has been the coming of this mighty revolution. Nothing can stay its progress. The victim of temptation—the degraded drunkard, has taken the work into his own hands. He tells you how truly he knows the sufferings of intemperance,—and asks if he is not the true apostle to his poor brethren in drunkenness. One’s very heart melted at the deep expressions of sympathy for those who still suffer by this vice, which came so often from the delegates from Baltimore.

Not only has the example of this reformation spread widely to the brethren of the reformed drunkard; it has reached men whom it was of the utmost importance to reach. It has reached them who bought and sold that which was the cause of drunkenness, and which gave perpetuity to its existence. The Council have before referred to this as a probable result of the reformation of intemperate men. This result has actually occurred amongst us, and most grateful must it be to every true friend of the cause who learns it. What is this result? What has produced this change in a man’s daily business, and which was daily bringing to him great gain? It was the direct product of the conviction of the evil that business and that gain were doing to other men, friends it might be, or neighbors. An evil which nothing can equal either in itself or its consequences. In obedience to this conviction, an immediate abandonment of the ruinous traffic has followed. Here, then, was the sacrifice of business and profit to a great principle—the paramount principle of love to man—to our neighbor, whomsoever that man might be. It was sacrifice to a cause of sacrifice, that of temperance. Here is a true principle for action. Here is something which every man may understand and put to practice.

In expressing their sympathy in this new movement in the cause—in the new society which has been formed here, the Council would respectfully suggest to the friends of Temperance if it would not usefully contribute to the efforts of the society referred to, if such pecuniary aid were furnished as would meet the incidental expenses of meetings. These men have, it may be, for years withdrawn themselves from regular employment and what they have earned by uncertain and transient labor has been expended on intoxicating drinks. Their families have been totally neglected by them, depending for support mainly on charity. The entire, the perfect recovery from intemperance to sobriety has not, it may be, been followed at once by employment, and this may be the case for some time. The ragged clothes, and the whole squalid appearance which are the direct legacy and product of drunkenness are not a recommendation to confidence and to employment. Here then is a moment in the life of the reformed of the utmost consequence both in itself and in that to which it may lead. Should such a man be left for a moment to himself? Should he be neglected by those who have abundance, in this hour of his utmost need? No. He must be upheld. He must have his present necessities administered to. Means must be at once supplied for present comfort, and occupation secured for future need. This is most important not only in view of himself and family now, but because of its remoter importance. No man is safe at any time in idleness, and dependence on others. How unsafe, how wholly dangerous is such a state for him in whom a reformed life has begun—begun only; and who can be wholly safe only by being made self dependent, and who is constantly employed.

It is with great pleasure we record the formation of a society which has for its object to give aid to the families, to the women and children of those who have been the subjects of the temperance reformation. This Society is composed of women. And to whom can such an office more appropriately belong? They are the visitors of the poor and the sick—the helpless aged, and the helpless young. They will labor to learn the story of the whole wretchedness of intemperance, and be the willing ministers for others to its relief.

RESIGNATION OF MR. DELAVAN.

ALBANY, Jan. 18th, 1841.

To the Rev. J. Marsh, Sec. Am. Tem. Union.

My dear Friend: I have your letter, Jan. 12th, with a statement of your receipts and expenditures for the past year. I notice with great pleasure that the Union is out of debt, and has a small sum in the Treasury to begin the year with. I deem it of the first importance that the National Society be sustained, and that the Journal, which has been conducted with great ability, and to the satisfaction of the public likewise be supported. Placed, as the society now is, at the very focus of information which is flowing in upon you from all parts of the world, it is very desirable that the organ for conveying to the public this intelligence, should be cherished and supported by the friends of temperance throughout the Union.

You are aware, my dear Sir, that I have frequently intimated to you, during the past year, my earnest desire, that my place as Chairman of the Executive Committee be supplied by some one residing in New York City. The inconvenience of having the Executive Committee scattered through several States, as they now are, is very great, and prevents that frequency of consultation, and exchange of views so important to the cause for which we labor. I trust as soon as it can be effected, the Executive Committee will be so arranged as always to have a quorum in your city on whom you may call at all times for counsel and advice.

Considerations of health, and being obliged to leave the country with my invalid son, with an uncertainty when I shall return, and other circumstances, of a private nature, now render it a duty in me, to resign my station in the Union. In doing so, however, you may rest assured that my interest in it, and in the Temperance cause, now so gloriously triumphant, finds no diminution, and that the American Temperance Union will always be, on my mind, and in my prayers; and although compelled to withdraw from the responsible station, which the national convention at Saratoga honored me with, and as a responsible member of the Executive Committee, the society shall continue to have all the time and effort I can give to it, consistent with other claims upon me.

As the Union was formed by a National Convention, I feel a confidence that the friends of Temperance throughout the country will feel it to be a duty to support it.

I am, my dear Sir,
Truly and affectionately your Friend,
EDWARD C. DELAVAN.

E. (p. 18.) .

As frequent inquiries are made respecting the origin, nature, and principles of the American Temperance Union, it is thought advisable to republish the following account of it, from the Seventh Report of the American Temperance Society.

Pursuant to a call from the American Temperance Society, as recommended by the National Temperance Convention, held at Philadelphia, May 24, 1833, a meeting of officers and delegates from the State Societies, throughout the United States, assembled for the purpose of forming a general Temperance Union.

Dr. S. Agnew, of Pennsylvania, was called to the chair, and John Marsh and I. S. Loyd were appointed secretaries.

On motion—Justin Edwards, Edward C. Delavan, N. S. Beman, Thomas Brainard and G. B. Perry were appointed a committee to report officers and prepare business for the meeting. The committee, after having retired, reported the following members as officers for the present meeting of the Union:

STEPHEN VAN RENSSELAER, of N. Y., President.

SAMUEL AGNEW, of Penn.

WILLIAM JAY, of New York,

G. B. PERRY, of Massachusetts,

RICHARD BOYLSTON, of N. H.

CYRUS YALE, of Connecticut,

JOHN MARSH, of Pennsylvania,

ISAAC S. LOYD, of do.,

HARRISON GRAY, of Mass.,

THOMAS BRAINARD, of Ohio,

Vice Presidents.

Secretaries.

The committee farther reported a series of resolutions, which were adopted, as follows:

1. Resolved, That the officers of the American Temperance Society, and of each of the State Temperance Societies, in their associated capacity, be denominated The United States' Temperance Union.

2. Resolved, That the object of this Union shall be, by the diffusion of information, and the exertion of kind moral influence, to promote the cause of Temperance throughout the United States.

3. Resolved, That Isaac S. Loyd, Matthew Newkirk, and Isaac Collins, of Pennsylvania, John Tappan, of Massachusetts, Edward C. Delavan, and Samuel Ward, of New York, and Christian Keener, of Maryland, be a committee to carry into effect, by all suitable means, the objects of this Union; and that they continue in office till others are appointed.

4. Resolved, That the above mentioned committee call another meeting of this Union, at such time and place as they may judge proper.

5. Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretaries of all State Societies be, ex-officio, members of this committee.

6. As it is proved by the united testimony of thousands of medical men, and by a great number of facts, that ardent spirit is a poison, the drinking of which is not only needless, but hurtful, as it necessarily tends to form intemperate appetites and habits, and while the use of it as a drink is continued, intemperance can never be done away; as it causes a great portion of the crimes, wretchedness and pauperism in the community, &c. &c., therefore,

Resolved, That for the benefit of the community, and especially the young, it be published and circulated as extensively as practicable, that, in the judgment of this body, after deliberate and careful attention to this subject, the use of ardent spirit as a drink is morally wrong, and ought to be universally abandoned; and that we unite with the thousands of physicians and the hundreds of thousands of philanthropic men, in this and other countries, in expressing the sentiment that the entire disuse of it as a drink, would tend powerfully to promote the health, the virtue and the happiness of the community.

7. As the traffic in ardent spirit, to be used as a drink, ministers to the use of it, and teaches the erroneous and destructive sentiment, that such use is right, and thus tends to produce and to perpetuate the above mentioned evils; as it also tends, by increasing pauperism and crime, to augment the taxes of the people, &c. &c., being contrary to all just views of liberty, as well as a violation of the fundamental maxim of common law, "so use your own as not to injure the public;" that for the benefit of a few, (spirit dealers), the many should be burdened, therefore,

Resolved, That the traffic in ardent spirit as a drink, is, in our view, morally wrong, and ought to be universally abandoned.

8. As the traffic is now upheld by the sanction of legislation, and that legislation tends to perpetuate the above mentioned evils, therefore,

Resolved, That it be respectfully suggested to all friends of humanity, whether the laws which authorize the traffic in distilled liquors as a drink, by licensing men to pursue it, are not morally wrong, and whether they ought not to be so modified, that the evil should be no longer licensed, or its continuance receive the sanction of legislative support.

9. The morality or immorality of using ardent spirit as a drink, is, in our view, the grand point on which the defeat or triumph of the temperance cause depends. If it is thought to be morally right to drink ardent spirit, and to traffic in it, both will probably be continued, intemperate appetites will be formed, and drunkenness with its evils will be perpetuated; but if it is morally wrong, and the evidence of this truth is universally, kindly, and perseveringly exhibited in words and in deeds, by all the friends of truth; and attended, as in that case we may expect it will be, by the influences of the spirit of truth, it will universally prevail; therefore,

Resolved, That all persons who do not drink or furnish ardent spirit, and yet do not believe either to be immoral, be, and they hereby are requested to examine the subject in the light of all the facts which are developed, and of all the consequences of drinking ardent spirit, and see if they have not heretofore been mistaken; and if they should be convinced that the practice is immoral, that they be requested to use all suitable means to spread universally the evidence of this truth throughout our land.

10. As it is a maxim of common law, as well as of common sense and of the Bible, that the accessory and the principal in crime are both guilty, and as the men who furnish grain and other materials for the distillation of ardent spirit to be used as a drink, and the men who rent tenements for grog-shops to be occupied in the sale of it, are manifestly accessory to the perpetuating of the drinking of it and its evils; therefore,

Resolved, That they be, and hereby are respectfully requested to consider whether their practice in the above mentioned particulars is not inconsistent with moral duty, and injurious in its consequences to mankind; and whether an enlightened regard to the public good, as well as to the great principles of morality and the Christian religion, do not require that those practices should be universally abandoned.

11. As the expression of the views of enlightened, judicious and philanthropic men, especially of those who, from their profession and employment, have peculiar opportunities to form a correct judgment on the subject, has deservedly great weight with the community, therefore,

Resolved, That all physicians in the United States be, and they hereby are respectfully requested to examine this subject, and give the result of their inquiries with regard to the nature of ardent spirit, in its effects on the human system to the public; and to state explicitly, whether in their view the entire disuse of it as a beverage, would not promote the welfare of mankind.

12. Resolved, That we view with great pleasure the rapid increase of temperance publications, and would earnestly recommend it to the friends of temperance in each state, to take effectual measures to put a copy of some such publication statedly, into every family that will receive it throughout the country.

13. As the living voice is one of the principal means of operating on the public mind, and many persons can be influenced only by this means, and as great good has already been accomplished by means of living agents, visiting all parts of a county, or a state; therefore,

Resolved, That it be, and hereby is respectfully and earnestly recommended to the friends of temperance to employ one or more such agents permanently in each state.

14. As young men are the hope of our country, and as the course which they may take with regard to temperance, will have a momentous bearing not only on their own character and happiness, but on their influence upon the world; and as the cause of temperance has already been essentially promoted by this interesting and efficient class of our citizens; and should all young men give to this cause their united and persevering support, it would soon be universally triumphant; therefore,

Resolved, That every young man in the United States, in view of the benefits which his example and influence may confer, be requested to give to this cause his prompt, energetic, and unremitted support.

15. Resolved, That the females of the United States, in view of the powerful and salutary influence which they may exert over all classes in the community, and especially over the young; and the immeasurable blessings which they may be instrumental in conferring upon all future generations, and for both worlds, be, and they are, most respectfully and earnestly requested, universally, in all suitable ways, to give to this cause their united and persevering efforts.

After the organization of the Union, the foregoing resolutions were adopted with great unanimity, as expressing the deliberate and solemn convictions of its members. We subjoin the following remarks as explanatory of the temperance organization in America. This organization consists of the American Temperance Society, twenty-three State Temperance Societies, and more than seven thousand associations in counties and smaller districts of country.

The American Temperance Society is composed of a number of known and influential friends of temperance in various parts of the United States. Its object is, by the diffusion of information, and the exertion of kind moral influence, to extend the principles and blessings of temperance throughout the world. In the prosecution of this object, it does not intend to unite all the friends of temperance in the United States in that society, but to procure the formation of a state society in each state, a county society in each county, and local associations in cities, towns, villages, and districts in all parts of the country. Each of the state societies takes the general supervision of temperance operations throughout the state. The county societies, as far as they please, are auxiliary to these, and superintend operations in the county. Local associations in cities, towns, &c., when they choose to be, render themselves auxiliary to the county societies, but regulate their own movements and efforts according to their own views of necessity and expediency, and with direct reference to their own wants and ability. Each society is independent of all others, except so far as each may choose for mutual benefit, and for the public good to become united; no one society having power to dictate to another, or to control its operations. Each seeks the same object, but no one is obliged to pursue any but its own course to attain that object.

The United States' Temperance Union consists of the officers of the American Temperance Society, and of each of the State Temperance Societies, or of a delegation equal to their number, appointed by them.

Enough has been done to show that the principles adopted are correct, and the means used efficacious. Let them be universally and perseveringly applied, and with the divine blessing, the object will be accomplished. Abstinence from the use of that which intoxicates, while it will tend to promote the bodily and spiritual, the temporal and eternal good of mankind, will also cause drunkenness to cease from the earth. Sobriety, with its attendant blessings, will become universal, and the time be hastened, when the will of God shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

At the National Temperance Convention, held at Saratoga Springs, in 1836, the Union was re-organized, under the name of the American Temperance Union, and officers were elected. The pledge of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors was adopted by the Convention, and became thenceforth the pledge of the Union. With a substitution of intoxicating liquor for ardent spirit, the foregoing resolutions express, in the main, the present principles of the American Temperance Union.

F. (P. 18.)

VERMONT STATE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY,

Held its anniversary October 13. The meeting, which was well attended, was one of unusual interest. The Report of the Secretary presented no unusual advance of the cause, but exhibited many encouraging prospects.

NEW HAMPSHIRE STATE SOCIETY,

Held its annual meeting at Concord, June 9, and resolved, "that while we repent of past indolence, we pledge ourselves to God, and the community, and to each other, to be more zealous and active for the future.

MAINE TEMPERANCE UNION.

The Fourth Anniversary of the Maine Temperance Union was held at Augusta, the 2d Feb. The meetings extended through two days and two evenings, and were exceedingly interesting. The report read by the Corresponding Secretary was animating and encouraging. The circulation of the Gazette has increased about 50 per cent. during the year. Rev. Mr. Lovejoy had proved a very efficient agent throughout the year. Reports were given, with statistics from 25 towns. In these towns little had been done to promote the cause, yet in some there had been much advance, particularly in Kennebunk. Machias, the banner town, being without a licensed house. Old obstacles to the cause, such as want of interest in its friends, fear of displeasing those who are implicated in the traffic, example of some professing Christians, love of money and love of rum, fashion, inconsistency of professed friends, still exist. Wine drinking in social parties is nearly abandoned in most of those places from which returns have been received. Temperance taverns were rising. At the annual meeting the State was divided into three sections, each of which was put under an efficient Executive Committee. The results have already been happy. A great impulse has been given to the cause by the formation in March of a Washington Temperance Society at Augusta, and others since in several places. A considerable number of drunkards have been reformed, and are diffusing great joy among their families.

MASSACHUSETTS TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

This ancient institution held its 29th anniversary May 28, 1841. Dr. J. Warren in the chair. The annual Report was read by Dr. Walter Channing, Secretary.

During the past year the Society have published the Annual Report for 1840, several editions of the tract entitled Doings of a Spirit Shop, Cranberry Meadow, and other smaller publications, and at the late Simultaneous Temperance Anniversary, they purchased and presented to the children of the city 4000 of the Youth's Temperance Lecturer, by Dr. C. Jewett. They have also circulated various other temperance publications of a useful character, so far as the limited state of the Society's finances would admit.

The Report dwelt principally on the marvellous, the miraculous changes which have occurred in the reform of intemperate men during the year, and the duties of temperance men and of the public arising out of these changes.

MASSACHUSETTS TEMPERANCE UNION.

The Anniversary of the Union was held at Boston, May 25, 1841. The Report was read by Nathan Crosby. The Union have pursued a course of vigorous and most efficient action throughout the year. Its object has been to place the monthly journal of the Union, a monthly tract, and an almanac into every family in the State. It has accomplished it to a great extent. Dr. Jewett and Mr. Crosby have visited most of the towns of the State as agents. Members have been received on a payment of one dollar a year. The results of labor in obtaining signers to the pledge and closing dram shops has been great. A City Total Abstinence Society has been organized in Boston with 2000 members.

CONNECTICUT STATE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Anniversary of the Connecticut State Society was held on the 29th of May, 1841. The Society was reorganized by an adoption of the Total Abstinence Pledge, and the Hon. Thomas S. Williams, Chief Justice of the State, was chosen President, and Chas. J. Warren, Corresponding Secretary. Most of the county and town societies have kept up their regular meetings through the year, the others have neglected them wholly. The new license law referring the subject of license to the towns, has, in some places operated favorably, in others it has thrown open the traffic indiscriminately to the great detriment of the community. Connecticut has had no temperance press, but has been supplied with the publications of the Union. Mr. Warren is engaged by the Executive Committee to act as State Agent.

NEW JERSEY STATE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The anniversary of this society was held at Trenton on the 29th January. On account of the badness of the roads, and a severe storm, but few delegates were present. A good spirit was manifested, and some important resolutions were adopted. A memorial was sent to the Legislature, praying that, in view of the evils flowing from intemperance, and the traffic in intoxicating drinks, they would pass such laws as shall prohibit any one from selling them unless he have previously obtained the consent and approval of a majority of the legal voters of the corporation or township in which the applicant resides.

NEW YORK STATE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The twelfth anniversary of this venerable institution was held at Albany, in the Pearl street Baptist Church, on Wednesday, the 10th of Feb. A large delegation was present. In the business meeting a new constitution was adopted, more adapted to the advanced state of the cause. In the evening, the spacious church, aisles, stairs and all, were crowded with an attentive audience. The Report of the Executive Committee, as usual, was an able and interesting document; taking a wide and glowing view of the progress of temperance in the earth, and furnishing interesting details of its advance at home. During the year, 201 new Temperance Societies have been formed, and 51,954 pledges to total abstinence obtained. Among these are several Catholic, and a large number of Youth's Temperance Societies. From the whole state are reported 1570 Temperance Societies with 243,212 members pledged to total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks. Three hundred churches in the state have during the year substituted the "fruit of the vine" for the alcoholic liquors they had previously used at the eucharist. The press have given its influence more than ever to the cause, and the ministry has labored in it with much power. The publications of the last year were 293,520, equal to 9,105,211 12mo. pages, making the whole, in nine years, 14,815,764 12mo. pages. Addresses were made by Rev. John M. Van Buren, B. R. Wood, Rev. Dr. Potter. Several very important resolutions were adopted, and a large delegation appointed to the National Convention at Saratoga in July.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE SOCIETY.

This Society held a state Temperance Convention at Harrisburg in February, during the sitting of the legislature. Reports of delegates from various parts of the state were of an unusually animating character. The principles of total abstinence were represented as on the increase, and their adoption by the Irish population was viewed as a signal gain. The German population in that great state come slowly to the work. Yet in some of the German counties there have been great changes.

DELAWARE STATE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the Delaware State Temperance Society was held at Cantwells Bridge on the first Tuesday of May.

Delaware is without a distillery. The county and local meetings have been well attended and done great things toward purifying the state.

MARYLAND STATE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

This Society held its anniversary at Annapolis on the 25th of Feb. The Report was more favorable and animated than any which had ever been made. Wonders had been accomplished, especially in the reformation of drunkards in the city of Baltimore.

KENTUCKY.

The Fourth Annual Report of the Northern Kentucky Temperance Union was of a very favorable character, and shews much good action in Northern Kentucky. The principles of the society have been advancing during the past year more steadily, silently, and effectually than in any previous year. A convention was held at Washington, May 25, 1841. Thirty societies reported 3463 members. A State Society is to be formed. A new temperance paper has been started in Kentucky, called the Temperance Banner.

ILLINOIS STATE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The anniversary of this Society was held at Alton, on the 17th of Dec. An able and spirited report was presented by Mr. Corey, the Secretary.

From this report it appears that in four years, this Society have sent out 400,000 Heralds, 1,000 permanent Documents, 300 Manuals, 1,000 Temperance Reporters, 1,500 Sargent's Tales, and 100,000 Almanacs. The whole expenditure, $4,680, has been given by members of the Executive Committee. The only means used the last year have been the circulating of the Herald. The great good reported has been a great and marked change in regard to the necessity, utility and lawfulness, morally, of using liquors. Many interesting facts were given in the report, such as that Four-fifths of the merchants of the State have ceased dealing in spirituous liquor.

The influence of temperance was most marked in the late Presidential election.

A marked change is visible among members of the Legislature.

In most of the villages and settlements there are temperance houses. Several infant settlements are without the means of drunkenness, and by charter, are to remain so.

In a large number of churches total abstinence is a term of communion.

Nearly or quite all the steamboats that now leave the ports of Alton and St. Louis, have recently, by mutual consent, dispensed with the practice of furnishing liquors for their tables.

Many physicians have discarded Alcohol from their practice.

Several distilleries, some large and profitable, have been stopped.

Many are the cases of remarkable reform from drunkenness.

The existing license law, it is believed, has worked well.

Judge Robbins an able man and warm friend of Temperance was appointed State Agent and immediately entered on his work.

MISSOURI STATE TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of this society was held at St. Louis, Jan. 21. The report was read by Dr. Knox. The Temperance Herald, published at Alton and St. Louis, has been the organ of the Society. Mr. Turner has continued indefatigable in his labors as an agent, has visited 30 counties and delivered 120 lectures; has formed many new societies, and reports a great number of the intelligent and virtuous of the community, throughout the State, as settled in the belief of the correctness and importance of the total abstinence principle.

IOWA.

A Territorial meeting was held in Iowa in January, and a spirited society organized the year before with the resolution to commence the settlement of that beautiful county on true temperance principles, was represented as in a state of much prosperity.

WISCONSIN.

The annual meeting of the Wisconsin Territorial Temperance Society was held in Prairie Village, Jan. 20; 21 Delegates were present from all the principal settlements in the Territory, and a good spirit pervaded the meeting. 17 societies were reported, with 1422 members; 869 being added this year.

NORTH CAROLINA.

A Temperance Convention has been held during the year at Ashville. The different temperance societies represented were numerous and devoted to the cause. Much has been done for temperance in the mountain counties.

SOUTH CAROLINA STATE SOCIETY.

The Executive Committee of this society are conducting an able paper, and are constantly devising ways and means to give it a wider circulation. It is a strong support at the South.

GEORGIA.

A spirited temperance paper is maintained in this state. In 1839, more than 20,000 petitioners asked the Legislature to abolish the retail of spirituous liquors in this state; and never did any movement unite more talent and character. The same spirit has been active in various ways during the past year, in the promotion of the cause.

TEMPERANCE RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted by the (Old School) Synod of Philadelphia, Oct. 1840.

The Committee to which was referred the memorial presented by the Total Abstinence Society of Gettysburg, asking an expression of the Synod of Philadelphia respecting the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating drinks, respectfully report the adoption of the following resolutions by the Synod.

1. Resolved, That it is decidedly their opinion, that the ministers, elders, and members of the churches under its care, and others abstain from all intoxicating drinks as a beverage.

2. Resolved, That the members of our churches be earnestly exhorted and enjoined to refrain from the manufacture and sale of them.

3. Resolved, That a renewed impulse should, if possible, be given to the progress of the temperance cause, to arrest the great and manifold evils arising from the drinks in question, that a wholesome reform be effected as widely as the bounds of our country and the world in the habits of all now given to the use of any alcoholic drinks.

4. Resolved, That this Synod would most affectionately and firmly say to the members of the churches, that they are utterly at a loss to know how, amidst the light which beams on this subject at the present day, any communicating members of the church of Jesus Christ can reconcile it with his views of Christian duty to manufacture or to use such drinks, or to sell them to others, or to rent a public house to any one intending to engage in the traffic, or to sign a petition to the court to license any house in which such drinks are to be sold, and they do most earnestly beg their brethren seriously and solemnly to consider the most important subject, and at once and for ever renounce a business so fraught with ruin to others, and that may be a source of deep and bitter regret to themselves on a death bed.

5. Resolved, That the above resolutions be published in the Presbyterian, and that the pastors be directed to read them from their pulpits to the people of their charge.

At a meeting of the (New School) Synod of Pennsylvania, October 27th, a letter from the Executive Committee of the New York Temperance Society induced resolutions, which urge continued and increasing effort on the Church in this noble cause; and a recommendation, which the interest and activity of the clergy should never need—to present the subject of total abstinence to every church and congregation within its bounds, at least once a year; and also that frequent, it matters not how frequent, meetings be held for the presentation of the subject; and that the projected Convention at Harrisburg, in January next, be as numerously attended as possible.

The Philadelphia Methodist Conference, on the 15th March, adopted the following resolutions on temperance.

1. Resolved, That we regard the temperance cause with increasing interest, and greatly rejoice in its triumphs both in our own country and in foreign lands, during the past year.

2. Resolved, That total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, is the only course that can be depended on, either for the prevention or cure of drunkenness, and that we earnestly recommend this course to all our people.

3. Resolved, That we consider the traffic in intoxicating liquors inconsistent with pure Christian morality, and that we enjoin upon our preachers more strenuous efforts to induce all our members to abandon this traffic.

4. Resolved, That as our rules forbid the use of spirituous liquors as a beverage, except in cases of necessity; and as it is now fully established that there is no necessity for their use by men of health; it is disobedience to the order and discipline of the Church for our members to use them.

At the last meeting of the New York Conference of Reformed Methodists held at Onondaga, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas we are commanded to "be ready to every good work," and believing that the temperance cause presents the most rational and efficient means of removing one of the greatest evils that ever disgraced humanity; an evil that is filling our poor-houses with paupers, our jails and prisons with criminals—spreading distress, misery, and degradation throughout our land: therefore,

Resolved, That we advise all our brethren to give to the Temperance cause—a cause that, under God, has already done much to dry up the fountain of domestic misery, and pluck many, who had gone far in the road to ruin, as brands from eternal burning—their influence and decided and vigorous support.

The Synod of Cincinnati, (New School) at their October, 1840, session, in Troy, adopted the following resolutions:—

A circular from the New York State Temperance Society was read, and referred to a committee whose report was adopted as follows:

Resolved, That the use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage ought not to be tolerated in our churches, and that our presbyteries be requested carefully to watch over their ministers, licentiates and churches in respect to this practice.

Resolved, That we beseech members of our communion, "by the mercies of God," to refrain from making or selling intoxicating drinks, and from providing or selling the materials to those who manufacture them.

Resolved, That as citizens, Christians, and Christian ministers, we deplore the use which has been made of the cry of "hard cider," the lifting up of casks, the bacchanalian songs and other insignia of intemperance, by party politicians at the present day, as in our judgment calculated to encourage the use of intoxicating drinks, and lead to the miseries of inebriation.

☛ The New Jersey Baptist Association, at its last meeting, resolved to abstain from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, &c. Several of the churches have adopted the principle and pledge of total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks as a term of communion, and speak of the benefit derived from the pledge being made a test of membership among them.

Extract from the Report of the New York State Temperance Society.

A large number of churches in the State of New York, during the last year have substituted "the fruit of the vine" for the alcoholic liquors they had previously used at the eucharist. There are now in the state nearly three hundred such churches. On this subject, the Executive Committee have held, and do hold, that it is exclusively the right of churches or ecclesiastical judicatories to determine what shall or shall not be used in any of their ordinances. But, as temperance men and Christians, we rejoice that science has demonstrated alcohol is no more "the fruit of the vine," than muriatic-acid is sea-water; or miasma a healthy living vegetable substance.

Extract of a Letter from Rev. John Frost, of Waterville, N. Y. to the Editor of the New York Evangelist.

WATERVILLE, JAN 29, 1841.

Before the communion at the commencement of the present year, the Presbyterian church in this place held a meeting for the purpose of discussing the question, whether alcoholic wine should not be dispensed with; and wine made from dried grapes substituted.

The subject was fully and freely discussed. In addition to the objection to alcoholic wine, it was stated by one of our physicians, and by some of the most intelligent members of the church, that there was the most satisfactory evidence that nineteen-twentieths of what was sold for wines was manufactured in this country; that these wines were made of diluted spirits sweetened, of sour cider and wine, into which was put sugar of lead, logwood, and other drugs, some of which were of a poisonous and unhealthy nature. It was remarked, that were the materials of which most of the wines used in our churches were made, brought to the communion table, and prepared in the presence of the communicants, they would be shocked at such a desecration of the ordinance, and would refuse to partake of the base mixtures. It was further stated that by using such liquors under the name of wine, our churches were encouraging their manufacture. After a full discussion, all the members of the church, male and female, who were in favor of substituting wine made from the dried 'fruit of the vine', instead of that heretofore used, were requested to rise, when every member present rose.

Four pounds of the best box raisins were procured, and put in a jar with one gallon of water, and kept in a warm place for two or three days. The liquor was then strained, and poured off after settling.

This was found a delicious beverage. It was used at our communion, and so far as I know, every member was gratified with the change. I have been thus particular, hoping that it may have some influence to induce churches which use the base alcoholic mixtures above named, to abandon them, and substitute this or some other unfermented wine.

There are now in this vicinity, eight or ten churches, which use wine made from the raisin.—The labor of preparing this wine is little, and the expense no more than that of the alcoholic mixtures ordinarily used.

Letter from John Dunlop, Esq., President of the Western Temperance Union, Scotland, to the President of the Montreal Society.

54, CHARLOTTE STREET, PORTLAND PLACE,
LONDON, March 22d, 1841.

Dear Sir,—I have just received your favor of 8th ultimo, directed to the Glen, at Greenock.

The views of the friends of temperance having made progress, it is not a matter of wonder that a question should have arisen on the subject of the beverage used in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. This has latterly proved itself to be not merely a theoretical, but a practical question, and one of importance.

It appears that in those churches where the sacrament is administered as often as once a week, serious injury has arisen by the present method of using alcoholic wines. Men have been so tempted by the sight, smell, and taste of their old seducer, that they have been enticed to habits of inebriation again. This circumstance, you will observe, reduces the subject into a more questionable shape, than where the point was only, whether there was a probability that the blessed Savior used non-alcoholic fruit of the vine, in the institution of the ordinance.

But the settlement of the last point is also one of importance: and I think that the opinion of those here, who are candidly looking into the subject, is gradually and steadily verging towards the idea, that the unvitiated, unfermented juice of the grape, was the real element made use of in establishing the sacred institution. And therefore, whatever may be the view Christians hold as to the Savior's use of the fermented wines of Judea, at marriage feasts and other occasions, it seems clear, that we are enjoined to use unfermented wine in the Lord's Supper. There remains no farther injunction at all in Scripture, referring to the use of fermented wine; as the supper is the only occasion where any formal order on the subject of the partaking of wine is made at all, if we except the medical recommendation from Paul to Timothy. This may neutralize the false position often assumed, that our abstinence is contrary to Scripture.

The principal argument that seems nearly decisive of the question, is the phrase used of "fruit of the vine," &c., in the institution of the ordinance. And this has been considered as fortified by the consideration that it was unlawful to have fermented liquor in the house of a Jew, during the time of the Passover feast. On the general point, as whether the beverage at Cana were intoxicating, &c., it seems clear that among the Jews, Greeks, Romans, Persians, and other ancient people, nearly as much unfermented wine was made use of as the contrary. The choice comes to this, whether of these two did the Savior use at Cana, &c. Some infer that it could not have been the poisonous kind, and that of which it is said in Scripture, it is a mocker.

Some light seems to me to be thrown on this part of the subject, from those hints in Scripture where we are informed what the diet, beverage, &c. of the ancients were. Thus the repast given by Abraham to the Angels—Hagar's beverage, Jael's—the diet of Boaz and Nabal's reapers—the fourteen articles gifted to David from Barzillai—the loaves and fishes (no wine)—the Savior's repast, fish and honeycomb,—all without fermented beverage.

In general, the Temperance cause is making steady progress in this country. The great obstacle is the artificial and compulsory system of drinking usages, drink fines and footings in workshops, and the connection of strong drink with courtesy and etiquette in domestic life. A central association has been established in London, to attempt the abrogation of this very oppressive system; and there is the prospect of a protective fund being instituted to defend workmen who are driven from their shops as a punishment for controverting the drinking usages.

Although I look forward with hope and pleasure to meet my Temperance friends on your side of the Atlantic, at some period, I am afraid that the Saratoga meeting will arrive too soon for my capacity to take advantage of it.

There is now so much Temperance literature afloat, that it is difficult to select. The Reports of the New British and Foreign Temperance Society contain much valuable information; Bacchus and Anti-Bacchus; Baker's Curse and Idolatry, are our most popular works of any size.

The circumstance of the use of strong liquor being interlaced, interwoven, complicated in hundreds of arbitrary methods, with all the sentiments, habits, and practices of life in this country, make the Temperance Reformation one of slow progress. And as the upper ranks, the arbitrators of etiquette and usage, are almost totally hostile, it is clear that the strength of another arm than that of man must be interposed to this high argument, before Temperance shall become national in Great Britain.

With kind regards to your Committee and friends,

I am, dear sir, your faithful servant

JOHN DUNLOP.

III. (P. 22.)

BEDLOE'S ISLAND, N. Y.

This fort is a recruiting rendezvous to discipline and furnish troops for the army. It usually contains between two and three hundred men, and sends away in monthly squadrons to join the service, about fifteen hundred troops in a year. The recruits are chiefly obtained in this city, and previous to enlistment have generally blighted their prospects and debased themselves by inebriety. Temperance addresses and the distribution of suitable publications first kindled an interest amongst them on the subject, which by the management of the excellent chaplain, resulted in the organization of a society. But that which invests the association with special interest, is the peculiar advantages it enjoys for extensive usefulness. By an admirable regulation the constitution provides that every squadron which leaves the Fort, shall go out a branch of the original organization, a thoroughly organized Temperance Society with obligations to correspond with, and report to the parent association. The advantages for moral and religious instruction and discipline enjoyed by the troops at this place, are probably unsurpassed at any other station. And when it is recollected that five-hundred persons a year, are here inducted into temperance principles, and are sent out in little bands as Temperance Societies to different and distant parts of the country that are most difficult of access, but where temperance is most needed—united, moreover, in sympathy and profession by a common bond of abstinence, it is not easy to estimate the good, they may be enabled to accomplish.

In a letter to R. M. Hartley, Esq., Secretary of the N. Y. City Temperance Society, from whom we received the above statement, Rev. Wm. Burnet, chaplain at the Fort, stated the following interesting facts in January last.

Sir,—You may recollect, that the Temp. Society at this place, was formed on the 2d day of Oct., 1839, when addresses on the subject were delivered by yourself, and Messrs. Reese and Porter. At that meeting sixty-nine signatures to the total abstinence pledge were obtained; officers and men engaged in the work with ardor, and an organization was effected on the spot. Since that period, by the distribution of temperance publications, and two or three meetings each month, usually addressed by the non-commissioned officers and recruits at the fort, a very lively interest in the subject has been sustained, so that up to the 1st of January, 1841, a period of less than eighteen months, the names of more than one thousand persons have been enrolled on the pledge as members of the society.

It is an interesting fact, that the effects of the association have not been merely restraining and preventive, but that its influence to a great extent has been reformatory. Great numbers whose lives had been one continued scene of intoxication, whose health and faculties had been broken down by their excesses, and all whose prospects for this and for a better life were filled with gloom and the most fearful forebodings, have been reclaimed—and shall I say redeemed? Yes; to many the Temperance Society has not only come as an angel of mercy to set open the prison doors, and proclaim deliverance to the captive, but also to announce the acceptable year of the Lord. It has prepared the way for the operations of Divine truth, and many through unbounded grace, have been converted to God. You know there are many youths here, who have enlisted for the purpose of learning music, many of these have not only joined the society, but some, we trust, have become the subjects of converting grace. They have thus, in early life, taken the surest course to fortify themselves against temptation; and if found faithful to their pledge, will not only secure to themselves the inestimable blessing of temperance, but by their example and influence, prove a blessing to others. As near as I am enabled to estimate, at least two hundred conversions have occurred at this station within the past two years.

A great proportion of the members of our Society have been transferred to Florida and other places. But a correspondence being kept up between these and the parent Association, a watchful eye is kept over them, and we are informed from time to time of the fidelity with which they adhere to the pledge. In consequence of this vigilance, there have been 22 expulsions, and 17 have voluntarily withdrawn.

While a squadron from this station were at St. Augustine, East Florida, and other places where temptations to inebriety abound, according to a letter received, not an instance of a breach of discipline on account of intoxication had occurred, although among them were some who had been habitual inebriates for years.

On New Year's day we had a temperance dinner at the Fort, with plenty of good cheer, but not a drop of intoxicating liquor. A very numerous party sat down to the table, and every guest appeared to be the happier and better for the entertainment. But on particulars of this kind I must not dwell. I only add that a temperance meeting was held on the evening of the same day, and 67 new members were added to the Society.

I. (P. 23.)

During a protracted meeting in the Presbyterian Church at Waterville, N. Y., Nov. 7, 1840, the question, Is it morally right for professors of religion to furnish materials for the manufacture of intoxicating liquors? came under discussion. In that place there were three establishments which consumed about 100,000 bushels of potatoes annually, nearly the same amount of grain, and a considerable quantity of apples and cider, and 3000 cords of wood, all pouring upon the community 40,000 gallons of whisky. In the gain of furnishing, professors of religion in that place and vicinity were partakers to the great detriment of their religion. During the meeting, and while much seriousness pervaded the place, a man was seized with the delirium tremens. He had been one of the head men in one of the distilleries, and his horrors were great and terminated in death. The case deeply affected the community and led to the discussion. In view of the arguments used against the practise many professors were struck dumb. A day of fasting and prayer was agreed upon for the extermination of this sin from the churches. Several made confession, and 160 signed a paper pledging themselves to furnish no longer. A funeral sermon was preached at the burial of the man who had died, from Hab. ii. 15, in which the subject was furtherably investigated; which greatly increased the sentiment that they who furnished the materials were responsible for the evils resulting from the use of strong drink. The Baptist Church appointed a meeting to discuss the question whether the furnishing the materials for distilleries was an immorality and a disciplinary offence. A majority were in the affirmative. And though some continue the practise it is believed the death blow is struck, and the practice will be exterminated from the church here, and this vicinity. Some out of the church here have abandoned their practice.—N. Y. Evangelist.

L. (P. 26.)

A few statistics have been presented from prisons and alms houses the past year confirming the results of former investigations, that most of the pauperism and crime of the country is the result of intemperance.

Into the Portland alms house there were Admitted from April 1st, 1838, to April 4th, 1840,	715

Chargeable to intemperance,	665
Doubtful,	20
Not chargeable to intemperance,	30

Of the thirty not chargeable to intemperance, seven were Canadians passing through town, who were in the house but one day.

Of those assisted by the city, exclusive of those in the alms house, from April 1st, 1838, to February 22d, 1841—

Whole number,	1,728
Chargeable to intemperance,	1,620
Doubtful,	38
Other causes than intemperance,	67

Of eighty seven committed to jail in 1840, six are known to have been sent there for offences arising from the use of ardent spirits. The remaining twenty five were principally boys, who were probably the children of intemperate parents.

STATE PRISON—MASSACHUSETTS.

A Joint Committee of the Massachusetts Legislature have made to that body, a report respecting the State Prison. It appears that the establishment is too strait for their criminals. The committee mention the cause:

"It appeared in evidence before your Committee, during their investigations, in relation to the present crowded state of the prison, what has, indeed, been the result of their own observation as members of the community, —that, could we, by any means placed within our power, annihilate the numerous dramshops, which now, like so many plague-spots, infect our community, we should dry up the principal fountain of crime, and should, in the sententious but expressive language of one of the officers of the prison, "have rooms to let" in our now overflowing penitentiary.

"Neither on this subject is any legislation proposed by the Committee; but they do not, therefore, wish to be understood as intimating, or as believing, that nothing more can be, ought to be, or will be done, to check and remove this tremendous evil; on the contrary, they believe that the moral sense of a religious and enlightened community will not slumber over such an evil and its dreadful devastations,—but that it will awaken with renewed energy; and, advised by the experience of the past, that new and increased efforts will be made, and with new and greater success, founded upon and prompted by a sense of individual duty, responding to the calls of tempted, suffering and degraded humanity."

In Boston alms houses there were supported last year 14,912 paupers; out of the alms house, 7,768. Of the whole number, 8,287 were known to be paupers through intemperance, and nearly all this originated in dramshops. The tax for the support of paupers was 40,000 dollars.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION.—A most appalling fact worthy of notice in the statistics of this Report is, that of seven hundred and eleven, the whole number committed during the year, three hundred and seventy one were sentenced as "Common Drunkards," and that two hundred and seventy seven of the whole number sentenced, were under thirty years of age.

RHODE ISLAND.

Of the fifteen convicts now in the Rhode Island State Prison, ten, or two thirds of the number, were addicted to habits of intoxication at the time when they committed the crimes for which they were imprisoned. Nothing could be learned concerning the habits of the remaining five.

One of the ten brought to ruin by intemperance killed his wife in a drunken family quarrel. Another, a Narragansett Indian, remarkable for his good qualities when free from the maddening effects of rum, committed murder while in a fit of intoxication. Another, a young man of twenty-six years, formerly a Sabbath School teacher, committed a forgery when under the influence of strong drink. Another, notorious for intemperance, having had a contention with a minister of the place where he resided, entered the meeting house, took the Bible, carried it to his home, and burnt it. He is married, and the father of seven children.

Individuals committed to the Providence County Jail, in 1839, 243; in 1840, 240. It is the opinion of the warden of the prison, and the keeper of the jail, that nine-tenths of all the commitments, as above stated, were on account of intemperance. One man now in prison awaiting his trial on a charge of murder, was very intemperate, and had made up his mind to commit suicide; he succeeded in suspending himself by the neck—was discovered and cut down by an individual who wished to save his life; as soon as he recovered himself, he plunged a knife into the body of his friend, inflicting a wound which proved mortal.

Since the Irish Temperance Reformation commenced in Providence and vicinity, a great diminution in crime and peace-breaking has taken place among that portion of the community, as appears from comparing the number of commitments, and the proportion of foreigners, for three months succeeding the reformation, with the corresponding three months a year ago.

In November and December, 1839, and January, 1840, fifty-seven persons were committed; of this number, twenty one were foreigners.

In November and December, 1840, and January, 1841, thirty-eight persons; of this number, five only were foreigners,—which shows a falling off of three-fourths in the commitments of foreigners since the Irish reformation.

The admissions into the Dexter Asylum from February 9th, 1839, to February 9th, 1841, two years, were one hundred and fifty-five. Of this number seventy-six were persons of known intemperate habits, five cases of delirium tremens, fifteen cases of insanity, and seventy-four persons whose habits are unknown. Allowing one half of those of doubtful habits to have been brought to destitution through intemperance, and allowing one half of the cases of insanity to have been caused by intemperance, about four-fifths of the whole number of admissions to the Asylum, are found to be in consequence of the use of intoxicating drink.

HARTFORD, CT.

Of eighty cases brought before the courts in Hartford Ct., four were acquitted on trial, and one was insane, leaving seventy-five cases of conviction: of these, two were cases of drunkenness.

Thirty-two were crimes committed under the influence of intoxication. In most of these cases, the previous habits, so far as known, were intemperate.

Fourteen were crimes, not known to be committed in a state of intoxication, but committed by persons of known intemperate habits—some of them of the most confirmed and debasing character—leaving no doubt as to the connection of their intemperance with their crime.

In two, intemperance was indirectly the occasion of the crime.

Twenty-five were crimes not committed in a state of intoxication. In some of these cases the previous habits were known to be temperate; in others nothing was known on the subject.

NORWICH, CT.

The undersigned have taken the trouble to visit the County Jail and the Alms-house (in Norwich, Con.,) for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the influence of intemperance as a cause of pauperism and crime; and the following is the result of their examination:

In the Alms House they found 29 individuals, of which, 26 are adults, and 3 boys. Of the 26 adults, 21 are intemperate themselves, and two came there from the intemperance of others. One of the boys has an intemperate mother. Therefore, of 26 adults, 23 came there from intemperance. And they found that of the three remaining adults, one had an intemperate father, and another had an intemperate mother, but they were not sure that intemperance was the cause of their being at the Alms House.

At the County Jail in this town, they found that there had been during the year 1840, 86 commitments. Of these, 33 were for the crime of intemperance, and 48 for crimes of which intemperance was known to be the chief cause. Therefore, intemperance was the chief cause of 81 out of 86 commitments. It is worthy of remark, that of the 33 commitments for the crime of intemperance, 30 were from this town.

EXTRACT FROM A CIRCULAR OF THE NEW YORK CITY TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The annual report of the Comptroller of the City of New York, exhibits the cost of pauperism and crime in the city for the year ending with the 31st of December, 1839. It is an established fact, that at least three-fourths of the cases of pauperism, and three-fourths of the offences against the laws, are attributable to strong drink.

Value of city property in the Alms-house, Halls of Justice, Penitentiary, and Bridewell, in 1839, $1,500,000; which, at seven per cent. interest per annum, would yield $105,000 00

Expenses of the city during the year under the following heads of account:

Alms-house,	$275,000 26
Bellevue Hospital,	6,688 00
Courts,	39,384 31
Charities,	3,248 48
Halls of Justice,	5,448 86
House of Detention,	128 46
House of Refuge,	21,450 00
Justices' Courts,	14,956 58
Lunatic Asylum,	30,000 00
Police,	35,759 27
Salaries,	54,476 35

Total, 591,541 03

Three-fourths of this enormous expenditure being chargeable to intoxicating drinks, is $443,655 76. The cost of the City Watch is $233,527 76. But for strong drink the one-half of this sum would be saved, which half added to the above, and the grand total is $560,419 64.

The city tax the last year was $1,352,832 58. Of course more than two-fifths of this sum, or about forty-two cents of every dollar paid as tax, is occasioned by intemperance.

From the special report of the commissioners of the Alms-house department, dated April 6th, 1840, we learn, that the total number of inmates in the Alms-house, Penitentiary, and Bridewell, during the past year, was 37,625; three-fourths of this number, or 28,218, having been brought to these places by drunkenness, we have the appalling fact, that nearly one-tenth of the inhabitants are made paupers or felons by intemperance. According to the united testimony of Hugh Maxwell, Esq., and the Hon. Judge Edwards, but three cases of murder have occurred in this city for the last twenty-two years, which could not be traced to strong drink as the cause.

ALBANY.

From a printed statement of the accounts of the city and county of Albany, as audited by the board of supervisors, it appears that the expenditures for the last year's crime and pauperism is about $51,000, while the common school tax for the same period amounts to only 11,000. Of this 51,000, more than half was expended for the poor. Could there well be a people more liberal in educating for the state prison, or more economical in educating for good citizenship!

ORANGE COUNTY, N. Y.

In seven towns in this county, there are seventy-one licensed taverns and grocers; and in Newburg alone, eighty-eight. Some distilleries that some years since stopped, recommenced operations. Last September there were thirteen distilleries manufacturing whisky in one town. One of the distillers obtained license of the commissioners to sell liquor by the small. The amount paid for the support of the poor in this county, the last year, was THIRTEEN THOUSAN DOLLARS; what portion of this was paid for intemperance appears from the following statement from the county records:

Brought to the poor-house, within eleven months previous to September 26th, 1840, three hundred and four.

Not through intemperance, seven.

Doubtful, fifteen.

Through intemperance directly or indirectly, two hundred and eighty-two.

MOSES SAWYER, Keeper.

Jail report, from November, 1839, to September, 1840: 182 commitments—sober, nine; doubtful, nine; in consequence of intemperance, 164. On the first of September, twenty-three were in prison, and all came there through intemperance.

Attest. ROBERT L. HATHEWAY, Sheriff.

BALTIMORE CITY AND COUNTY JAIL.

By the Report of the Visitors of the Jail of Baltimore City and County, it appears that the whole number of persons committed during the year, ending 26th November, 1840, was 1730, viz: 1107 white and 623 colored. The daily number of prisoners has averaged 79—from the city 73, and county 6.

The whole expenses of the prison, including repairs, amounted in the same period to $8,441 45, of which the city's proportion is $7,764 78, being twelve-thirteenths of the whole amount. The city's proportion of the fees received at the Jail, amounted to $2,103 24, and from moneys received from licenses to retailers of spirituous liquors $874 04—leaving the actual demand to be met by taxes on assessable property of the city, $4,787 45. The report shows a balance in favor of the county of $1,145 75, and it is believed no levy will be required of the county this year.

CONDITION OF THE OHIO PENITENTIARY.

On Dec. 1st, 1840, there were in the prison 488 convicts.

—[Annual Report of the Warden of the Ohio Penitentiary.]

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The township of Cleveland expended, as appears from the books of the County Auditor, the sum of $2560,42; but in addition to this, orders were issued to the amount of $400, payable one year after date, making the actual expenditure of the township for the year, $2960,42.

Of this amount; only $130,36 was expended for other than pauper purposes, making the pauper charge of the township for the year, $2830,06. Of this sum 2255,33 is paid for the support and relief of the 325 intemperate poor and their families, and only $291,32 is paid for those who are known to be temperate—being more than three-fourths of the pauper expenditure chargeable to intemperance, and about one-tenth for the support of those known to be temperate.

The total criminal expenditure of the County the past year, as above stated, is $8910,63 and taking the Jail expenditures for two years as the data, $8484 therefore is chargeable to intemperance.

Of the total expenditures for all county purposes, the past year—being \$12,288—\$8484 therof is paid for the safe keeping and feeding intemperate offenders, and for the arrest, examination and trial of intemperate trespassers and disturbers of the peace, being nearly $\frac{1}{2}$ of the whole county expenditure. The whole criminal expenditure of the County, and the aggregate pauper expenditure of all the towns in the county, amount to \$15,069, and \$13,389 thereof is paid for administering criminal justice in the county to Intemperate law breakers, feeding and securing them, and for the support and relief of the Intemperate poor and their dependants—being over seven-eighths of the whole pauper and criminal expenditure chargeable to Intemperance.

The Prison Discipline report for 1841 states that crime has decreased in proportion to the increase of population. In 13 penitentiaries the increase of prisoners was only 86. From these 904 have been discharged, and only 12 had escaped, 8 of whom were in Kentucky. Among the causes of insanity, intemperance produced 12 per cent., ill health 25, the affections 16, loss of property 4, mesturbation 6.

REMARKS OF JOHN TAPPAN, ESQ., OF BOSTON,

At the Opening of the Massachusetts Temperance Union, May 26, 1841.

One of the first commission merchants in Boston informed me, that he was in the habit of receiving large consignments of Holland gin from a house in Philadelphia, and he sold it to the principal dealers in this city. He has since been informed by his correspondent, that there was not five gallons of pure Holland gin in all his various shipments, but it was nearly all of his own manufacture, and he had made a fortune by it. It is notorious that all liquors can be so closely imitated as to deceive the best judges. In Paris, the past winter, an individual was prosecuted, convicted and fined, for making spurious Champagne wine. An editor of one of the Paris journals, in giving an account of it, remarked—"It is very cruel to fine a man for making Champagne wine, when not one bottle in a thousand that is sold, is unadulterated." It is notorious that the wine imported as Marseilles Madeira, is made out of an inferior wine, brandy and other ingredients, and that the city of Marseilles has been greatly enriched by the traffic in the article. The manufacture of wine is going on now in this city. So perfect has the manufacture of wine become, that any kind can be so imitated, as to deceive connoisseurs. Even George the Fourth was deceived on a certain occasion, when he made a great entertainment, by his butler. Dr. Woodward published an account of his visiting a man who had broken his leg, and when he had set it, he asked if they had any rum in the house. They brought him some, with which he wet the bandages; but two days afterwards, he was alarmed when he found the heads of the pins which he used in binding it up were corroded, and on examining the rum which was used, he found it contained a large portion of oil of vitriol!!

In London, the past winter, a man purchased a leg of mutton, and finding it black and putrid the next day, he carried it back, and accused the butcher of selling him spoilt meat. The butcher denied the charge, and pointed him to the mate leg, which was in a perfectly sound state, and asked him if he did not stop anywhere, on his way home. The man acknowledged that he called in at the Gin Palace, and took a glass of spirit, some of which fell upon the leg of mutton, the day before, and turned it black; undoubtedly it was partly oil of vitriol.

That the Albany ale and beer was made from water drawn from a pond in which dead horses, hogs, dogs and cats were decaying, was proved in the action brought by the brewers against Mr. Delavan, and to be in common use by brewers in that city; and from it was manufactured that delicious beverage, known as Albany ale.

Poisonous drugs have been extensively used in the manufacture of wine and beer in this country, as has been acknowledged by those who have quitted the business.

Now, if only pure spirits, wine and beer were sold, it would still be poison so far as the alcohol in them went; but as many of you may wish to know something of the way in which wine is made—wine, that delicious beverage, so enchanting and exhilarating—I will state what I saw in passing through the vineyards of France, Italy, and Germany.

During the three and a half months we spent on the continent, we witnessed much wine drinking, with considerable use of brandy; but cases of beastly intoxication are much less frequent there than in America and England. We passed through the finest wine countries in Europe, in vintage time; and witnessed the “treading out of the grapes.” On an appointed day, all the inhabitants of a hamlet assemble early in the morning, and with carts containing baskets, tubs and casks, proceed to gather all the grapes, sound, and in every stage of decay, in large tubs, resembling in size and cleanliness the tubs in which hogs are scalded and dressed in America. When the tub is sufficiently filled with grapes, spiders, spiders’ webs and flies, a lad jumps into it, and drawing up his pantaloons to his middle, commences, sometimes with bare feet, and at others with his barn-yard shoes, to jump upon the grapes, and force the juice through holes in the centre of the bottom of the tub into a large tunnel, which is inserted in a cask. When the cask is filled, it is rolled away and carted to the village, from whence it goes to the wine merchant, and is manufactured, which means adulterated, and sent to market. Nothing can be more filthy and nauseating than the dirty, slovenly way wine is made, unless it may be the water back of Albany, of which Mr. Delavan proved they made strong beer. Could wine drinkers, who so much extol the cockroach flavor of their wine, in our country, once realize that it probably is the spider flavor, they would loathe what they call the pure juice of the grape. It is a well-known fact, that no pure wine is exported from wine countries, and why it should be believed that there is, when it is so notoriously otherwise that even the dealers themselves make no secret of their mixtures, passes my comprehension.

Wine and spirit dealers, of our countrymen, when abroad, boast of their mixtures at home; and the idea of any pure spirits, brandy or wine, is absurd, when it can be so easily counterfeited and passed off as genuine.

CHAMPAGNE.

Extract from a letter written by a distinguished physician and chemist of the city of New York, to E. C. Delavan.

“Are you aware that the greater part of the Champagne wine, ‘imported,’ (so called,) is nothing but a solution of sugar of lead and sugar, with whisky and fixed air? I have seen a bottle analyzed to-day, which contained a quarter of an ounce of lead, and not a particle of wine in it. And still this stuff is guzzled down as if it was nectar, and all for fashion’s sake. Ninety-nine hundredths of all the wine drank in this country, is made in it. The process generally pursued is—take whisky and pass it through charcoal, and extract all the oils which flavor it, then mix with the various species of wine they wish to make.—Color, with burnt sugar.”

N. (P. 28.)

The noble steamers on the New York and Providence line have closed their bars, and are receiving for it justly the thanks and congratulations of the public.

At a meeting recently held on board the Massachusetts, Dr. Codman in the chair, the following resolution was adopted.

Resolved, That we hail with joy the progress of the temperance cause in this country at the present time, and feel it to be a just matter of congratulation, that in accordance with the spirit of the age, the traffic in intoxicating liquors has been discontinued on board this steamer, and all those of the line with which she is connected.

Several other large steamers that run east from Boston have given up their bars.

During the late extraordinary movements at Boston, Mr. Boutell, the keeper of the National Hotel, was so impressed with the evils of intoxicating liquor in a public house, as to come to the conclusion to banish it at once, and forever from his premises. The following is an extract from a letter sent by him to the President of the Washington Temperance Society.

Boston, May 21st, 1841.

S. F. HOLBROOK, Esq.

Dear Sir,—For a great number of years, I have been in the habit of selling and drinking spirituous liquors. I have long been aware of the evil it has inflicted, not only upon myself, but upon the community; and, until recently, I have never had the fortitude to resist the tide, which was fast overflowing me. I now feel that I have conquered my worst enemy, and trust I shall never again be defeated by him. This is the first time intemperance has ever been attacked in the right way. The most inveterate drunkard, is, in many cases, the most benevolent and kind-hearted man. In some cases, he is the most intelligent. Those who are often the most intemperate, are the most liberal. My own experience has taught me this. Having for so many years been the keeper of a public house, both in this and another city, I do not exaggerate, when I say that those who drink the most are the most benevolent. I have hardly seen an instance where an individual (like those of whom I have spoken) drink alone. It is always “hale fellow well met.” “Let us take a little something together,” is the universal saying among those who are in the habit of drinking. Nothing but perseverance will bring about the reformation which we have commenced. We must work day and night in this glorious cause, which is the cause of virtue, of morality, of learning, of good government, and, in fine, the cause of God! My friends are doing every thing for me that I can ask; and in few weeks I hope to see my house filled with temperance boarders, who will take “the long pull, the strong pull, and the pull altogether,” in this glorious cause. My friends all greet me with pleasure, and all assure me of their confidence and support. I am sometimes astonished to see so many of them who have got the start of me in this cause. I find many have joined our society, who, a few years ago, would have smiled had they been asked to join such a cause. These are true and substantial men—men in whom the most implicit confidence may be placed.

Gentlemen of the Society, permit me to say a word to you by way of encouragement. You are engaged in a most righteous work. You have before you a great work yet to do. On you depends the result whether Boston, which is the first and foremost in every good work, shall take the lead in the cause of Temperance.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Tenth Annual Meeting of this Society was held in May. During the year the committee had rendered the pledge an optional act on the part of persons enrolling themselves as members, making the pecuniary subscription the only test.

The Report presented the following facts as evidence of the progress of Temperance in Great Britain and Ireland. The quantity of malt used by the brewers, publicans, and beer-shop keepers of England, Ireland, and Scotland, was 776,785 bushels less than in the year 1839. Of distilled spirits of all kinds there was duty paid for consumption in England, on 11,817,926 gallons, being 255,488 less than 1839; Scotland, 6,271,496 gallons, being 30,329 less than 1839; Ireland, 7,427,604 gallons, being 3,420,605 less than 1839.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SOCIETY FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF INTemperance.

The annual meeting of this society was held in the Great Room, Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening, May 5. The hall was filled at an early hour. The platform was crowded with ministers and gentlemen from the metropolis, and various parts of the country, including the leading members of the two great total abstinence societies, namely, the above society, and the New British and Foreign Society. At six o'clock, the President, and the Right Hon. Earl Stanhope, took the chair, amidst the acclamations of the audience.

After prayer for the Divine blessing, by the Rev. George Evans, Mr. J. W. Green read an abstract of the report. Ninety auxiliaries were now in connection with the society, in which were about forty thousand members, more than four thousand of whom had been reclaimed from habits of gross intemperance. About two hundred ministers of various denominations were in union with the society, besides about seven hundred persons who were engaged in advocating gratuitously the principle by which they had been benefited. Some thousands had been brought under regular religious instruction, many of whom had been admitted into Christian churches.

NEW BRITISH AND FOREIGN TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The new British and Foreign Temperance Society held its anniversary at Exeter Hall, May 17. J. Dunlop, Esq. in the Chair. The Hall was densely crowded in every part, and never did the platforms present such an array of sterling temperance talent, character and influence. The Secretary read the Fifth Annual Report. £1952 had been received in donations, and, £1273 for publications. The Report stated that intemperance was the chief cause of existing crime and pauperism, and dwelt on total abstinence from all that intoxicates as the only remedy; it pointed out the beneficial effects which on almost ten thousand times ten thousand honest hearts had been wrought by this principle, and it contained accounts of hundreds of societies established for the promotion of the cause. Powerful but unsuccessful efforts were made to unite the two societies on the short pledge;—the members of this society feeling it to be their duty to adhere to the American pledge which excludes the traffic and giving liquor to others.

Of the forty counties in England, more than half have been strongly agitated by tetotalism; but its spread has been chiefly in Lancashire, Buckingham, Cornwall, Cumberland, Devonshire, Lincolnshire, Middlesex, Norfolk and Suffolk. The reformation of drunkards has ever formed a prominent part of the work, and more than 30,000 have been the fruit. One sixth of these have become members of Christian churches. In London more than fifty meetings have been held weekly. Agriculturists, sailors, carpenters, shopkeepers, fishermen, bricklayers, stone masons, sawyers, nursery men, and medical gentlemen, have extensively borne testimony to the excellence of the temperance principle. The increase of individual and domestic comfort among the working classes, from the adoption of the pledge, is immense. A society has been established in London to abrogate the arbitrary compulsory drinking usages, and there is prospect of a protective fund to defend workmen who are driven from the shops because they will not drink.

In Wales, tetotalism is considered so inseparably connected with the advancement of religion, that it is viewed as a Divine dispensation to expel the crying sin of drunkenness from the land, and ministers have been the chief instruments of advancing it, and they are gathering into their churches an immense harvest of men who were once drunken characters.

The last Report of the Western Scottish Temperance Union is a deeply interesting and important document. It gives reports from 110 societies, containing 61,905 enrolled members, embracing 16 medical men, and 42 ministers of the Gospel. 170 persons are mentioned as having relinquished the traffic. Mr. Law has performed an efficient tour through nearly all the towns of Scotland. At Glasgow, 60 meetings have been held weekly. A series of sermons by popular preachers have been preached during the winter at Glasgow on successive Sabbath evenings; and great preparations are making for a temperance procession in June. 15,000 Catholics have there signed the temperance pledge, 4,000 of whom marched the streets under temperance banners on New Year's day.

P. (p. 31.)

PROGRESS OF THE CAUSE IN MONTREAL.

The number of members added to this society during the past year is 402, exclusive of 168 soldiers who were admitted as a branch society. The number which has been lost by death, removal, or inconsistency, is not known.

A very great impetus has been given to the temperance cause within the past year by the powerful advocacy of the Rev. P. Phelan, a Roman Catholic priest of this city, who has delivered many excellent addresses and exhortations on the subject to his congregation, and has succeeded in forming a society of about 3000 members, which includes a great proportion of our fellow citizens of Irish origin in this city, as well as many from the surrounding country. We regret to add that this society is not strictly tetotal; but a large portion of its members act as if it were, and drinking is diminished to a great extent.

The Committee have also much satisfaction in stating that an impulse has been received from a heretofore unexpected quarter, namely, the brethren of French origin, whose attention has been turned to the subject of temperance by the Bishop of Nancy and some other ecclesiastics. The lectures and exhortations of these influential men, have resulted in the formation of a well organized society of nearly 3000 members in this city, the influence and example of which are felt and imitated in the country places around. This society, like the last, is not tetotal, but it has had the effect to render drinking less reputable, and greatly to diminish the quantity of liquor consumed in the meantime; and will lead to the adoption of total abstinence principles.

PROGRESS IN QUEBEC.

The cause of total abstinence has made rapid progress in this city during the last winter. Last season at this period there were not over 250 tetotalers; now there are over 6000, and additions are making daily. Meetings of an interesting character are held frequently, and the principles are generally understood and approved by the most respectable class of the community. Many most notorious drunkards have been reformed. In the country the Catholic priests seem vieing with each other in zealous efforts to promote this glorious cause. Thousands of Canadians have joined societies. There is certainly a mighty revolution in the land.—Letter to Cor. Sec. A. T. U.

HALIFAX, N. S.

Extract from the Report of the Committee of the Temperance Society of that place, May 7, 1841.

"The Committee submit their report at the close of a year, distinguished for unexampled success to the cause of Temperance. A short time before the commencement of their period of office, a marked improvement had taken place in the addition of your society: the meetings, which for a long time previous were exceedingly discouraging, had become better attended, and signs of returning vigor had begun to appear in the renewed exertions of members. The prosperity which had thus commenced, has throughout the year advanced with ready and uninterrupted progress. During that period upwards of four hundred and twenty persons joined your society, so that the number of names now on the book amounts to upwards of six hundred and fifty; of those who have lately joined.

"Your Committee are happy to state that the greater proportion are now on the principle of total abstinence.

"Your Committee rejoice to state, that this success, great as it is, bears but a small proportion to that which has attended the cause of temperance in Halifax, through the instrumentality of another society. They notice with unfeigned satisfaction that the St. Mary's Society, established during the past winter, numbers over 3,300 of their fellow-townsmen. They have also much pleasure in noticing that a society forming a branch to the present has been established, and is now in active operation under the superintendence of the Rev. Mr. Breare; it numbers upwards of one hundred and twenty members, over one hundred of whom, are on the principle of total abstinence."

ST. JOHN'S, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Sir,—Since I last had the pleasure of addressing you, the Temperance Cause has rapidly advanced in this city and other parts of this province. The principles appear to be better understood now than formerly. I beg to remark that the first Total Abstinence Society formed in Europe or America, was formed in this city, 25th May, 1832, and has advanced with more or less success up to the present time, and out of a population of 28,000, we have three Societies formed with 2,850 members, or a tenth of the whole city.

TEMPERANCE IN HOLLAND.

The Annual Report of the Temperance Society of Rotterdam, of which G. H. Eshuys is President, C. C. Jurrecvitz, Vice President, and J. Deyll, Secretary, presented in January, 1841, describes the work of temperance in Holland as in its infancy, having scanty funds and comparatively but few friends. The amount of members is fifteen only above the number of the former year. The society holds correspondence, and has received encouraging communications from Weener and East Friesland, where the cause is patronized by the Prince Heese, aided by ministers and literary gentlemen—also from the New York State Temperance Society at Albany—also from the “Conseil Central de salubrité publique de Brussel.” The pamphlet contains an Address from the President, in which he pleads the cause and urges the practice of total abstinence, by which he hopes a prevailing and blessed state of temperance will be produced.

A tract published by the Society, called “the Golden Cross,” is intended for the young, and is a pleasant dialogue between “Klaas Van Oorschot and Barend Bakker,” representing the downward course of intemperance of the former, and the persevering efforts of the latter, by which ultimately his friend was saved from the disgrace, distress and ruin of the poor drunkard. It illustrates two important facts—the danger of presumptuously trusting to good intentions when we are unwilling to bind ourselves by sacred pledges—and the happy result of faithful, affectionate and persevering efforts to reclaim a friend from the way of destruction. Van Oorschot, once a poor drunkard, was restored to comfort, respectability, usefulness, and his family by his friend Baker.

TETOLALISM AT THE CAPE.

A Cape paper, the Graham's Town Journal, of January 14th, contains a very interesting report of the second Anniversary Meeting of the colored members of the Port Elizabeth Total Abstinence Society. It took place in a large school-room connected with Union Chapel, which was very neatly ornamented by the Natives. After they had partaken of cake and tea, their pastor addressed them in Dutch, on the evils of Intemperance; on the conclusion of this gentleman's address, a Kafir stood up to tell his artless tale to the listened crowd, and he was followed by other speakers, Hottentots, a Fingo, a Bechuand, and a man who was formerly a slave, all of them speaking in an unembarrassed manner. The writer of the account, says, “that all their clothing was good and neat, and some even genteel.” The dress of him who had been a slave, was “a handsome superfine blue cloth coat with gilt buttons, white waistcoat, trowsers, and linen which perfectly corresponded.” This meeting of Aborigines amounted to about two hundred in number, and surely it must have gladdened the heart of any feeling and Christian man to have beheld so many fellow-creatures rescued from the dominion of Heathenism and Intemperance.

LAUNCESTON, (VAN DIEMAN'S LAND.)

In a paper of a late date from Launceston, Van Dieman's Land, there is a report of a meeting of the Launceston Temperance Society, which took place in the Infant School-room, October 27. There were between 300 and 400 persons present. The Venerable the Archdeacon of Bombay was in the chair, and after a prayer had been offered up by the Rev. Charles Price, the Archdeacon spoke for two hours. The report of his speech occupies two columns of the Launceston Advertiser, and it appears that a considerable portion of it was taken up in demonstrating the superiority of totalism to moderation, which the speaker triumphantly effected. At the conclusion of the Archdeacon's address, which seems to have been very effective, the Rev. C. Price, the Rev. H. Dowling, Mr. Sherlin, and Mr. Allcock addressed the meeting, and at the conclusion several signed the Pledge.

TEMPERANCE IN THE WEST INDIES.

In the report of the Scottish Missionary Society for 1840, we have the following notice of a temperance society in one of its stations in Jamaica :

"It is now upwards of four years since the temperance society in connection with Hampden congregation was formed. It is said to be the first established in Jamaica ; and every year has witnessed its increasing prosperity and usefulness. It is divided into two branches—the adult and the juvenile. During the past year, 239 members have been added to the former, and 64 to the latter, making together 303. The whole number of members is now no fewer than 1195, and of these, about 200 have adopted the principle of total abstinence from wine and malt liquors, as well as from ardent spirit ; but this has happily occasioned no division among them, every one being left at perfect liberty to adopt the principles either of the temperance or of the abstinence society, as he thinks proper.

Q. (p. 31.)

The department of state has published certain commercial regulations enacted by the kings and chiefs of Feejee group of islands, among which there is one that forbids all trading in spirituous liquors, and all landing of these articles are forbidden. Any person offending is subjected to a fine of twenty-five dollars, and the vessel to which he belongs shall be denied all refreshments. Spirituous liquors found on shore to be seized and destroyed.

The commander of our exploring expedition, who procured this enactment, has covered himself with imperishable laurels.

A missionary at the Sandwich Islands, bears also most honorable testimony to the commander of the exploring expedition.

OCTOBER 14th, 1840.

The exploring squadron is now here, and captain Hudson is exerting a most happy influence. He addressed our church (native) a few days ago with good effect, and made some pointed remarks on the subject of intemperance. Oh that the Pacific were full of such men—missionaries would meet with fewer difficulties, and be relieved of many a heavy burden.

Since the visit of the French Frigate to these Islands, rum, under the name of French brandies is flowing in, threatening the peace and prosperity of the inhabitants. A missionary, Rev. Mr. Armstrong, writes, under date of Oct. 13th, 1840—

"We are called now to take the open field, guard every point, and spare no effort to foil the enemy. Some thirty-five members of this church have fallen in consequence of rum: most of them, however, profess repentance and a desire to return to duty."

Another missionary, Dr. Andrews, mentions the arrival of a vessel at the Islands bringing four French papal ecclesiastics, and a cargo of intoxicating liquors, and that a portion of both the passengers and cargo had found their way to Kailua. He says:—

The effect of the latter has been the downfall of two foreigners who had forsaken their cups and given satisfactory evidence of a change of heart, one of them for years, and had been admitted to the church. There has also been more intoxication, both among foreigners and natives, than there has been before for years. I am not aware that any native church member has been intoxicated.

The Mariners' Church, in Boston, now numbers 150 members. Of these more than one half are males, and of this half two-thirds were once inebriates. The Windward Anchor Temperance Society, connected with the Home, numbers, 254 members, pledged to total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks. The New York Marine Temperance Society numbers over 4000 members. It holds regular monthly meetings, which are very spirited.

Temperance Meeting at the Cleveland Bethel, Ohio.—At the last meeting at the Chapel on the subject of temperance, so much interest was manifested, that, by an unanimous vote of the Assembly, it was resolved to hold another meeting of similar character on Thursday evening of this week. Since that meeting, at least a score of sailors have signed the "tetotal pledge," through the influence of their shipmates. Among them were "all hands" and cabin boy of the brig Queen Charlotte.

Last Sabbath we had in our harbor 75 sail of vessels carrying freight, including the ship Superior, one or two brigs, &c., beside steamers and "small craft," yet among the whole the crews of only one or two were found at work. One "set of hands" we understand was discharged because they would not work, it being the SABBATH. Extra seats were used in the Chapel in the evening, but the sailors complained of the heat, and many of them took their stand on the stoop where they could have fresh air.

R. (p. 32.)

THE COST OF INTemperance COMPARED WITH THE COST OF SOME OTHER THINGS.

Extract from a Sermon preached at Brooklyn, on Sunday evening, the 15th February, by Rev. I. S. SPENCER.

Intemperance is a very costly vice. The annual cost of ardent spirits still consumed in our country is not less than 38,000,000 dollars. This is more than the whole usual expense of our national government. And this is not the whole cost of the intemperance of our land. The trials of intemperate criminals, and the support of intemperate convicts, and furnishing jails and state-prisons for them, annually cost the country six millions. The pauperism occasioned by intemperance costs the country annually, the sum of, at least, two millions and a half. The annual cost of wine, for eleven years, has been four millions, at least. Strong beer costs, at least, one million. The loss of time through idleness occasioned by intemperance, and the unnecessary lawsuits that grow out of it, should probably be reckoned almost equal to one-eighth of all the rest. But since it is not easy to determine these last amounts, I pass them by.

And now if we add together the cost of—

Distilled spirits,	$38,000,000
Wines,	4,000,000
Strong beer,	1,000,000
Pauperism occasioned by intemperance,	2,500,000
Criminal prosecutions, support of intemperate convicts, interest on the cost of public prisons,	2,000,000

We have the enormous sum of $50,500,000 which this vice annually costs for its support! All this, aside from idleness, and civil law-suits, and private charity. Here is a direct tax of $3 apiece for every man, woman, and child in the nation, to be paid annually, if this vice continues to prevail, as it has. What a tax! There is not an iron-handed despotism on earth which would dare to tax men so!

Compare this with the cost of some other things.

Now the American Bible Society, during the whole 24 years of its operation, has not cost the country so much as the strong drink consumed in the country costs now,—(after all the diminution since the reformation began,) IN 17 DAYS!

The American Board received in five years,	$889,879 56
Paid for foreign liquors in five years,	8,455,345 20
(Estimating at one dollar per gallon,) which is for six months,	845,534 00
The consumption of foreign liquors, therefore, sends nearly as much money out of the country in six months, as the American Board for Foreign Missions in five years!

If we had the income of five of the most prominent benevolent societies of our land—

The American Bible Society, (1840, sales and donations,)	$97,355 09
The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions,	241,691 05
The American Home Missionary Society,	78,345 19
The American Tract Society, (sales and donations,)	117,596 16
The American Education Society,	51,963 50

Making a total of, $586,950 99

we should not have enough to pay the direct cost of the spirituous liquors consumed in our country in five days! If we had the whole income of the American Board of Commission for Foreign Missions, during its thirty-one years of operation;	$2,753,605 65

American Bible Society,
during its twenty four-years operations;	1,888,648 02
American Tract Society,
during its fifteen years of operation;	1,107,670 71

American Home Missionary Society,	867,749 01
during its fourteen years operation ;
American Education Society,	807,269 00
during its twenty-five years operation ;
we should not have enough to pay the direct cost of strong drink in our land for fifty-four days !
The 363 miles of the Erie canal cost,	$10,731,595
The 97 miles of the Chenango canal,	2,009,582
The 76 miles of the Champlain canal,	1,179,872

Making a total of, $13,921,049

These are the three great works of the State. But the costs of the spirituous liquors consumed in our nation would pay every cent for the whole of them in FOUR MONTHS ! And here this proud "Empire State" has been embarrassing herself with this debt for 24 years ! and it is not paid yet !

I find by the legislative reports that,
The common school fund of the State of New York is,	$5,038,807
The literature fund,	268,777
The bank fund,	253,406

Making, $2,555,990

The whole capital of these three important funds would not pay the cost of the strong drink consumed in the country in TWENTY-FIVE DAYS !

The New York and Erie Railroad is another magnificent project. Its length will be about 446 miles. It will cost about 9,000,000 of dollars. The legislature, thought the company would do well, if they met the vast expense and finished the work in 20 years. But if those who use strong drink in our land would give the money it costs them, to buy this stock, they would pay every cent of it,—not in 20 years, but IN 12 WEEKS.

Another heavy matter of expense near by us, is the project of supplying the city of New York with pure water, by means of introducing the Croton river. Probably, when the work shall be completed, we shall find its cost has amounted to $11,000,000. The cost of these liquors, in the city of New York alone, would pay every cent of this vast expense in less than 15 years ! (Cold water for the city costs much, but it is cheaper than rum.) But probably, that debt will not be paid in four times fifteen years !

The war with England, from 1812 to 1815, was an expensive and bloody one. It plunged the nation into debt, and cost the lives of men slain on the "high places of the field." But during those very years the habits of drinking cost the country more money, and killed more men ! Man for man, and dollar for dollar, the drinking was worse than the war !

Let the wheels of the temperance reformation roll on and save the cost of intoxicating drinks, and what may not be done for the nation and the world ?
